D.C. Shouts Old Year Out, Gayly Greets 1941

'To the United States' Is President's Toast; Specter of Future Haunts the Party

Washington took a deep breath last night and blew the old year out with an ear-splitting roar.

The bedlam of sirens and whistles, horns and bells, shouts and songs, echoed over the city from Foggy Bottom to Chevy Chase, from the flats of Anacostia to the hills of Georgetown.

It was farewell to a year that brought total war to the world, misery and starvation to millions—farewell with few regrets for its passing.

Hail to the Unknown

And it was hail to a new year of uncertainty, greeted with determination by a nation girding to preserve in its borders the freedom and the peace that 1940 had seen wiped out in so much of the world.

The Capital of that nation marked the milestone with one of the most energetic and gigantic celebrations of its life. The President marked it with a toast to the United States.

As the clock's hands moved toward the zero hour, night clubs and hotel cabarets were filled with record-breaking throngs of merrymakers, cash registers jingled with what proprietors believed was unprecedented frequency and jazz orchestras blared over the hubbub of paper-capped dancers.

It was the biggest and most free-spending crowd that most of the proprietors had seen in their careers. No night spot could be found where record throngs had not gathered. And the manager of one hotel cabaret frequented by those with moderate incomes said he had never seen anything like the spending—"champagne at every third table."

If the thoughts of the celebrants were of the woes of the world, they failed to show it. In fact, night club managers reported, the spirits of the people were higher than in previous years, if anything.

"Trying to Forget"

One said perhaps they were trying to forget. Another, whose relatives are in Europe, asked, "What have the people of this country to forget?"

More throngs gathered on Washington's glittering "White Way"—F Street—and lines formed before the theaters for midnight shows.

Many were turned away after waiting as much as an hour. The line to the Capitol Theater stretched half a block to Fourteenth Street and nearly half way down Fourteenth to E. At the Earle the crowd extended down E Street and up an alley.

In many homes, others talked or drank at private parties. More celebration centers were provided by fraternities, clubs and such organizations as the Polish National Alliance and the Polish Club of Washington, which sponsored a

1941's First Baby Arrives With Year

Washington's No. 1 resident of 1941—at least in point of time—is: An 8-pound 2 ounce girl born at Garfield Hospital 15 seconds after midnight to Mrs. Dora Ackerman, of 649 Irving Street Northwest. The father is Sam Ackerman, proprietor of a liquor store at 1812½ Rhode Island Avenue Northeast.

Stations Shut To 1,500,000 ASCAP Tunes

By James D. Secrest

The new year arrived to find 1,500,000 musical compositions controlled by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers barred from the majority of the Nation's broadcasting stations.

Four of Washington's five radio stations, along with some 600 stations over the country, celebrated the coming of 1941 without benefit of ASCAP music. But their spokesmen said they had an ample supply of tunes left for all occasions, thanks to the newly organized Broadcast Music, Inc.

Hope for a last-minute truce, that would both release the vast reservoir of ASCAP music and forestall Justice Department proceedings against both sides in the litigation, faded several hours before midnight when five-year ASCAP contracts expired.

Operators on Alert

The Justice Department was preparing to institute antitrust action against ASCAP, B. M. I., the National Broadcasting Co., and the Columbia Broadcasting System in Milwaukee next Monday.

Radio station operators were on the alert to see that no unlicensed music found its way into the network microphone as midnight approached. Any slip would be expensive, as the copyright law enables ASCAP to collect $250 for each infringement from every station involved.

The four local network stations—WRC, WMAL, WJSV, WOL— which barred ASCAP music, were well prepared for the midnight deadline. They had been curtailing ASCAP music wherever possible since mid-December and plugging B. M. I. music.

Report No Complaints

Asked whether there had been any complaints from listeners, officials of the stations stated there had been none. A spokesman for WOL said he had received comments that the type of music had been improved.

Another official remarked that the public was accustomed to take whatever comes over the air and that he did not anticipate any objections over the loss of a few popular hits.

Besides having some 600,000 songs in its B. M. I. reservoir, the radio industry had plenty of good old-fashioned tunes on which the copyrights have expired.

Earl Dew Scores As Jockey Champ At Santa Anita

Jockey Earl Dew galloped home with a winner yesterday in the first race at Santa Anita with his 287th triumph as Walter Lee Taylor was disabled in a fall from his mount in the fourth race at Tropical Park, and to Dew went the year's jockey championship. Taylor had ridden 286 winners until his spill.

An estimated half-million people will step out today to the Nation's five "bowl" games to see the country's best football teams lock horns in post-season battles. Main event is in Pasadena's Rose Bowl, with Stanford and Nebraska. In Miami's Orange Bowl it's Georgetown versus Mississippi State. In New Orleans' Sugar Bowl it's Tennessee against Boston College. It's the Fordham Rams against Texas A. & M. in the Cotton Bowl at Dallas, Temple Teachers meet Western Reserve in the Sun Bowl at El Paso.

Knudsen Due To Be Made Defense 'Czar'

Swift Action Expected To Speed Up Plan To Make U. S. Arsenal

Swift Administration moves to place in immediate working order President Roosevelt's plan to make America a vast arsenal for the defense of democracies appeared imminent last night.

Most important of the announcements expected almost at once were:

1. The centering in William S. Knudsen of all the actual powers of the new office of production management for defense, which has been called the "supreme command" of the defense program.

2. An important move to be made by the Federal Reserve Board expected to affect the method of financing the huge defense program.

Alters Defense Board Setup

The proposal to make Knudsen administrator of the new Office of Production Management with full powers to direct the Nation's defense efforts is said to be embodied in an executive order, now tentatively drafted. The other three members of the supreme defense authority would have only advisory powers.

When the plan was announced originally, Knudsen was designated as "director," Sidney Hillman as "co-director" and Secretary of War Stimson and Secretary of Navy Knox as the other members. The President said at the time that the members would not vote, but were expected to agree unanimously on all orders. This, in effect, gave any member of the commission a veto power. In case the commission could not agree, the members might ask him to decide a question, Mr. Roosevelt said.

The new "czar" of American defense presumably would have an opportunity to put in effect as speedily as possible his proposal that arms production be placed on a "war basis."

Meanwhile, Washington leaders were tensely awaiting the Federal Reserve Board plan which is expected to be announced within a few hours. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau announced Monday after a conference with Marriner Eccles, chairman of the board, that an "important move" would be made but would give no hint of what impended.

Hitler Predicts 1941 Victory; Roosevelt to Offer Congress 'Lend-Lease' Plan in Person

President Will Make Address Jan. 6 on Total Aid for Britain

By George B. Bookman
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt personally will present to Congress January 6 his plan to lend or lease war material to Great Britain, and perhaps Greece and China, the White House disclosed yesterday.

The plan, which would cost $3,000,000,000 at the outset, would permit the borrowing nations to make repayment in vital war materials, such as tin and rubber, the President told his press conference.

Broadening somewhat his plan to lend weapons to Britain as a man would lend his neighbor a fire hose, the President said the plan would be one under which friendly nations could cooperate.

Legislation will be required to put the lend-lease plan into effect, the President said, explaining that it would have to be drafted in general, not detailed, language.

Ignores Axis Comment

The President's last conference before the opening of the Seventy-seventh Congress brought a barrage of questions on foreign policy and national defense. The President's replies were, for the most part, guarded—indicating to some reporters that he planned to be more specific when he goes before Congress.

Obviously pleased at the Nation-wide reaction to his Sunday night fireside chat which asked a "national effort" for defense and aid to Britain, the President would not comment on criticism of it from spokesmen for the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo Axis.

When a reporter read to him German press comments declaring his speech filled with "notorious untruths" and "spiteful," the President merely laughed.

Informed that some commentators on his fireside chat were not satisfied with his statement that there is no thought of sending another A. E. F. to Europe, and wanted a similar pledge about a naval expeditionary force, the President replied indirectly.

He said on this point that he had read all kinds of interpretations of his speech in the newspapers that he personally had never thought of before. Some of the interpretations, he said, hit him between the eyes.

Wheeler's Speech Not Read

Asked for comment on the allegation by Verne Marshall, chairman of the No Foreign War Committee, that a wealthy oil operator had handed him a German peace proposal in October, 1939, the President referred all inquiries to the State Department. The Department said yesterday, without commenting on Marshall's statements, that it received many similar peace plans but had not found one that was "feasible."

Another reporter interested in current pressure for a "just peace" asked if the President had any comment on the peace plan outlined in a speech Monday night by Sena-

5 Italian Ships Reported Sunk In Anglo-Greek Raids in Adriatic

By International News Service

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Dec. 31. In another daring thrust into the Adriatic, a lone British warship sank four Italian supply vessels today, it was reported here.

In addition, it was reported, a Greek submarine torpedoed and sank an Italian transport within Yugoslavian territorial waters. All the Italian crew was rescued.

Yugoslavia, it was assumed, would protest to Athens against the alleged territorial violation.

The Fascist ships sunk by the British warship were laden with heavy guns and motor trucks. The attacks took place off the port where the Albanian and Yugoslavian frontiers join. Most of the Italian sailors reached shore safely.

The lone warship's exploit marked the second incursion of British war craft into the Adriatic—Italy's "private lake"—within a fortnight. In the previous episode, a small British fleet dashed through the Straits of Otranto, shelled Valona, and returned without meeting any opposition.

Italian Tanks Routed

Athens (Wednesday), Jan. 1 (INS). Defeat of a counterattack staged by Italian tanks and the capture of much war material as well as some prisoners were announced by the Greek high command early today, while Italy once more resorted to widespread air assaults.

Italian defense lines have partially collapsed on the front stretching from Khimara, on the coast, through Tepelini to Klisura, latest advices from the battle zone indicated.

After the failure of repeated counterattacks, the Italians hastily are reorganizing a new line of defense across the middle of Albania, according to military informants.

There, with the aid of natural fortifications, the Fascists plan to base their last hopes for resistance. This line starts at the Adriatic south of Durazzo, and has as its backbone the Tomori Mountain chain—the most important range in Albania. The "last ditch" Italian line then extends to Elbasan, "gateway to Tirana," thence follows the Skumbi River and swings to the northeasterly direction to the Yugoslavian frontier.

Desperate Resistance

The Italian rear guard is putting up desperate resistance in order to provide time for reorganization of the line before the Grecian onslaught smashes through the final defenses also.

Hellenic troops now have occupied North Klisura, and command all approaches to that important town on the central front. Groups striking on the west towards Valona, the only major southern Albanian front, are engaged in a major clash against Italian detachments near the Logara Straits.

Roosevelt Tells King He Hopes Italy Finds Peace

President Roosevelt yesterday was revealed to have told the King of Italy that he hopes a "righteous peace" will come to the people of Italy in 1941.

The State Department made public the text of a New Year's cable of good wishes that the President sent King Victor Emmanuel III, often rumored to have differed with Premier Mussolini on major policy.

The text of the President's cable, in reply to one from the King was: "I greatly appreciate Your Majesty's cordial message. I extend to Your Majesty my most sincere wishes for your personal welfare and my hope that during the year to come the Italian people may be enabled to enjoy the blessings of a righteous peace."

At a press conference yesterday the President counseled against reading too many implications into the message.

In his Sunday night fireside chat the President denounced the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo Axis as an "unholy alliance."

As Big Ben Tolls

Charred London Greets '41 With Cry 'To Hell With Hitler'

By the Associated Press

London (Wednesday), Jan. 1.—In the unrelenting darkness of the blackout but with the crash of German bombs missing, new year revelers gathered today in the shadow of St. Paul's Cathedral and greeted 1941 with cries of "to hell with Hitler."

The merrymakers clambered over hose lines and, surrounded by the charred structures of buildings set on fire in the terrific Nazi assault Sunday night, sang "Auld Lang Syne" with smoke-blackened firemen still on duty.

Londoners in the fashionable West End cheered and sang as the old year passed on.

The great ring of Piccadilly—its blazing lights of former years extinguished for the war—had its revelers but most of the bomb-wearied residents remained indoors to toast the new year.

Through the night, searchlights and antiaircraft guns were idle in the peace which every Briton knew was only temporary.

Big Ben's 12 calm notes tolling the hour echoed through the city's streets.

The new year began without a sign of German activity over Britain, apparently because of a continuation of bad weather which grounded bombers Monday night. The Dover Strait was cloudy and foggy.

Behind the blackout curtains and double doors, night clubs were jammed with cheering, singing civilians and members of the armed forces, and there was many a quiet home celebration.

Hardly noting the "truce," if such it was, the government busied itself with steps to compel every Briton to participate in defense work against fire bombs of the sort which wrought

Nazis Confident

By International News Service

Berlin, Dec. 31.—Germany enters the new year tonight spurred to increased war efforts by the prediction of Chancellor Hitler that "democratic war criminals" would be destroyed and Germany would be victorious "within a few months."

He promised the German armed forces and the German people that "the year 1941 will bring completion of the greatest victor in our history."

In an indirect retort to Pr Roosevelt's speech of Sund Hitler openly said that a midable reply would con shape of "100-to-1" warfar Britain.

Hitler's predictions of speed tory came in a New Year ord the day to his soldiers, and in a long proclamation to the Nazi Party.

It was echoed by the press, which accused Mr. Roosevelt of "inaccuracies," and by the official radio, which said the President was "playing with fire."

Key men joined the chorus of confidence with this forecast by Propaganda Minister Goebbels: "What would Reynaud (Paul Reynaud, then premier of France) have done a year ago if he had known what the year 1940 would bring for France? And what would Churchill do today if he knew what England's fate will be in 1941?

Never did Hitler mention Mr. Roosevelt or his speech. Yet the dictator referred to "plutocratic democracies," and called charges contained in Mr. Roosevelt's address, that Germany plans world domination, "infamous lies."

England, Hitler said pointedly, must be destroyed, and any power "eating from it" also must die.

While the official press stressed that Hitler would not be "provoked" by the Roosevelt speech, the chancellor himself said that vastly intensified war would be the rule in the early months of 1941.

Strike Halts Work of 3,200 On Navy Order

Conciliator Flies To Washington, Sees Hillman Adviser

By the Associated Press

Fort Wayne, Ind., Dec. 31.—A strike of C. I. O.-United Automobile Workers of America, threatened three times previously, today shut down the International Harvester Co.'s Fort Wayne truck works, manufacturing parts for Navy vehicles.

The union threw a picket line across the factory's entrances at 5:30 a. m. (Central standard time) and company spokesmen said there would be no attempt to open the plant today. About 3,200 workmen had been employed.

Negotiations had shifted to Washington on a contract over which the union and company had bickered since the National Labor Relations Board certified the union as sole collective bargaining agent for workers in the plant after an election last May.

David T. Roadley, of Cleveland, Labor Department conciliator, flew to the Capital yesterday and conferred with John R. Steelman, chief of the department's conciliation service, and John Owens, C. I. O. adviser to Sidney Hillman, of the National Defense Advisory Commission.

[At Washington Labor Department and Defense Commission officials indicated no further action would be taken until Thursday or Friday to try to settle the strike.

500 Marooned By Nazi Raider Found on Isle

By the Associated Press

Singapore, Malay States (Wednesday), Jan. 1.—Five hundred men, women and children landed by German commercial raiders December 21 on the Emarau Island of the South Pacific have been rescued by an Australian ship and taken to Australia, it was announced officially today.

The rescued persons included British, French and Norwegians. There were 70 women and 7 children in the group.

Admiral Sir Geoffrey Layton, commander in chief of Britain's China station, said the situation was not as alarming as it first appeared as the survivors came from ships sunk over several months and not from a sudden wave of sinkings within the last few weeks.

The passengers and crewmen were from the following ships: Rangitane, Holmwood, Notou, Ringwood, Triona, Triadic, Triaster, Vinni, Tukraina and Komata, it was said.

The admiral said both the British and Australian navies were "well aware of the activities of the raiders and appropriate measures are being taken."

He said that in view of the vast expanse of ocean to be covered it might take some time to bring the raiders to book but that they would be accounted for eventually.

District's Traffic Death Toll For 1940 Lowest in Ten Years

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

Washington's traffic fatality toll during 1940 was the lowest in ten years. A total of 79 persons were officially listed as killed.

The death of an eightieth person in a motorcycle accident was not tabulated as a traffic fatality because it occurred on private property. In 1939, 84 deaths were recorded. At midnight last night, fewer persons had been killed in a year's period here than any time since 1930, when the victims numbered 77.

But the 1940 accident and injury record showed a sharp increase over the previous year. Last year, 1,262 more accidents were reported than in 1939 and injuries jumped 94 over the year before. The figures: 1940, accidents, 13,201; injuries, 3,860. 1939, accidents, 11,939; injuries, 3,766.

Officials, in explaining the increase, said far more minor accidents and injuries were reported during 1940 because of widespread publicity attending the creation of the Accident Investigation Unit in the Police Department.

The 1940 death list included 59 pedestrians—or almost 75 per cent of the total fatalities. And in approximately 75 per cent of the pedestrian deaths, motorists were exonerated.

A total of nine children, ranging in age from 14 months to 13 years, were listed among the 1940 victims. The oldest person killed was 93. The majority of victims were more than

Hopson Faces 85-Year Term For Fraud; Two Lawyers Freed

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 31.—The dazzling fiscal prestidigitation performed by Howard C. Hopson during some 18 years brought him face to face today with a possible prison sentence of 85 years after a Federal court jury convicted him of using the mails to defraud his utilities empire of millions of dollars.

HOPSON

The broken, feeble, former head of the vast Associated Gas and Electric System, sat expressionless and apparently not understanding the import of the jury's verdict—a verdict which was reached after 14 hours' deliberation following a trial which lasted eight weeks.

Because of the 58-year-old Hopson's precarious health, there was a possibility, however, that he might spend the rest of his days in a hospital rather than in prison.

Judge Alfred C. Coxe will decide his fate on January 9, the date he fixed for sentencing. Meanwhile, Hopson's bail of $5,000 was continued and his lawyer said he would remain [illegible] neurological institute where he has spent all his out-of-court time since the trial started.

Hopson's two codefendants, Attorneys Charles M. Travis and Garrett Brownback, who were accused of aiding Hopson in his financial operations for a number of years, were acquitted.

Fast, Hard-Hitting U. S. Navy Urged

Scrugham Proposes Study of Lessons Of Present War

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Incorporation of the latest in war-tested equipment in the Navy's sea and air striking arms, with emphasis on lightness, speed and high power, was proposed yesterday by Chairman James G. Scrugham, of the House Naval Appropriations subcommittee.

Indorsing the President's plan for loan or lease of war materials to Britain, Scrugham also proposed that Great Britain's Carribean possessions be gradually turned over to this Government for bases, as security for the war equipment leased.

Scrugham returned yesterday for conferences with Chairman Edward T. Taylor of the House Appropriations Committee and high naval officials before opening Navy subcommittee hearings later this month.

To Ask Expert Advice

The Nevada Democrat disclosed he would call on Admiral Harold R. Stark, chief of naval operations, for the "loan" of naval observers now on Europe's fighting fronts to advise his group on most effective equipment.

"In my opinion, there is a considerable amount of obsolescence in the equipment we are using today," said Scrugham, whose subcommittee has recently been on an extended tour of Naval establishments. "There is no room in our Navy at this time for anything that is obsolete. We are going to correct it, wherever it exists."

Scrugham, long an advocate of a separate air arm, said he thought the Navy's chief present need is more long-range bombers that can be quickly produced rather than large orders for new battleships that require six years in the building.

As an example of how the subcommittee and the Nation might profit from Britain's war experience, he cited England's effective use of radio-echo antiaircraft devices, and urged prompt modernization of the Navy's antiaircraft weapons to keep peace.

To Study Light Alloys

Naval experts will also be consulted on use of lighter alloys in new ship construction, he suggested.

"The surest defense is attack or swift counterattack and we want to be ready with equipment equal or superior to anything Europe has to ...," Scrugham said. "Before we ...head with appropriations, I ...dmiral Stark can provide ...bservers who can give us ...information on develop... ...d."

... proposed that Trinidad ...amas, "which we ought ... a proper defense," be ...or "sold" to the United ...eturn for war materials. ... said he would oppose any involving Singapore or ... Pacific possessions.

Roosevelt to Offer Aid Plan Himself

for Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana. He had not read the speech, the President replied.

Along the same tack, another questioner asked if the President agreed with suggestions made by Alfred E. Smith and others that various organizations like the William Allen White Committee for Aiding the Allies and Marshall's committee should "pipe down." Mr. Roosevelt answered with a jest.

He said that sometimes he is for the suggestion, sometimes against it, depending on which way those organizations are leaning at the moment.

The President also informed his press conference that the problem created by protests against the award of a defense contract to the Ford Motor Co., which has been cited by the Labor Board, is now under consideration. He said it was being studied by various defense and labor agencies, and by the White House.

But the President declined to give his general views on the propriety of awarding defense contracts to firms cited for violations of labor laws.

He said that a question on this subject was the same as asking at the time of the sit-down strikes in Flint (Mich.) whether sit-down strikes were illegal. To answer that question at that time would have been very bad governing, the President said. The object, he added, was to get the workers out of the plants without bloodshed. He said that, of course, the sit-down strikes were illegal.

At the State Department yesterday Secretary Hull declined direct comment on Senator Wheeler's speech urging that the United States strive for an immediate end to the war in Europe.

Hull, a former Senator, declared he could not undertake to carry on a debate with his old Congressional colleagues. He said he had too many other things to do.

Meanwhile, Gen. Robert E. Wood, acting chairman of the America First Committee, issued a statement saying that the President's fireside chat was "virtually a personal declaration of war on Germany."

"No longer is the President pledged to keep us out of war," Wood said. "His policy is now to keep us out of what he calls a 'last ditch war.'"

"It is time the Administration made it perfectly clear that the American people, in aiding Britain, will stop before the methods that mean war."

Stephen T. Early, White House secretary, said yesterday that messages flooding into the White House still favor the President's talk in a ratio of 100 to 1.

George Defends Full Aid to Britain

Senator Returns To Urge '24-Hour Defense Effort'

There is less danger for this Nation in extending full aid to Great Britain "than in following a wholly negative course," Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, asserted yesterday.

George, who succeeded to the Senate post formerly held by the late Key Pittman, returned to Washington to urge "the imperative necessity of an all-out, 24-hour effort to strengthen our national defense."

He said he thought the President's "strong picture" of conditions in the world at this moment was for the purpose of arousing the people to this need.

In the meantime, Representative Sol Bloom, of New York, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs committee, proposed joint hearings by the Senate Foreign Relations and House Foreign Affairs committees on any legislation that may be proposed to carry out Administration recommendations.

Undisturbed By Threats

Bloom said he was not as yet certain that legislation would be necessary, but if it should be, the program could be considered with more speed and effectiveness through hearings attended by both bodies. Once hearings were complete, he said, action on the program could be taken by each group independently. Bloom said he would discuss his proposal with George.

Discussing the President's defense speech with reporters, George said he was "not disturbed by the threats of any belligerents or any members of the Axis groups."

"In giving full aid to Britain, we necessarily act upon the settled conviction that the collapse of England might immediately involve us in war, or might create a world condition under which we could not live as a free people," the Georgia Senator said.

"In any event, the preservation of the peace and the security of the United States depends upon how soon the United States can provide a total and adequate defense."

Admits "Some Danger" Involved

"The extension of full aid to Britain does involve some danger," he said, "but it involves less danger on the whole, looking upon the world as it is at this time, than a purely negative course."

George said that by this he did not have in mind "any immediate invasion or attempted invasion of the United States under any circumstances. . . . I think we may overemphasize the absence of immediate military invasion or attack. Other considerations are quite as vital and quite as intolerable to every free people."

George said it is "rather irrelevant" to be talking about loans and advances when "the vital question is what we can furnish to Great Britain. The American workshop and factory is the first line of defense of this Nation."

Lee Says Marshall 'Angel' Has Stake in Nazis

Senator Josh Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma charged yesterday that the No Foreign War Committee headed by Verne Marshall was promoted by "a rich, international oil merchant" with a "great financial stake" in a Nazi victory.

Lee said in a statement that the "angel" of the committee headed by Marshall was "this man Davis" whom he charged tried "to promote a phony peace through the White House to pull Germany's chestnuts out of the fire."

Marshall, Cedar Rapids (Iowa) editor directing the committee, told reporters here Monday that W. R. Davis, New York oil operator, brought a German peace offer to Washington a month after the war started in September, 1939. The State Department said it had received no "feasible" peace proposal.

Marshall to Speak

Marshall announced in New York yesterday that he had accepted an offer by the Columbia Broadcasting System to speak over their facilities from 10:15 to 10:30 p. m. tonight.

Senator Lee in his statement said the No Foreign War Committee was "miscalled" and declared its "story" had come to light with Marshall's revelation that its "angel" was the oil merchant. He identified him only as "Davis."

"The record of this man Davis shows conclusively the great financial stake he has in a complete Nazi victory in the European war," said Lee. "Much of the gasoline sending showers of fiery death into the defenseless heart of London was sold the the German government by this man Davis in the months before the war started, but his traffic in this German-bound oil happily has been interrupted by the British blockade. This is naturally inconvenient to Davis—who would like to go on making his money out of this oil."

Charges "Appeal to Greed"

Lee said, "Just how sincere Davis is in his patriotic devotion to peace can be seen from the fact that in 1938 he tried to promote the importation of a squadron of German bombing planes into Mexico.

"The origin and practice of the miscalled 'No Foreign Wars Committee' gives us a timely object lesson in the technique of Nazi infiltration into America," continued Lee. "The first step is to appeal to the greed and profit hunger of a certain type of business man. He then volunteers to put up the money and assists in organizing a fine sounding committee that gets out a fine-sounding promotion literature to fool the people into believing it works for the holy cause of peace. The object of this Nazi-inspired maneuver is obviously to sabotage both our program of defense production and aid to Britain."

Statement by Davis

New York, Dec. 31 (AP).—William Rhodes Davis said today in a formal statement:

"I am confident that when, in the opinion of the present Administration, the best interests of the country can be saved by making public the information which I have from time to time delivered to it, it will be made public."

He did not mention the "peace plan" directly in his formal statement.

Davis said it was his practice, "as a sincerely loyal American," to inform Government officials as to his activities in foreign countries, saying he believed such information "can best be utilized by officials of the different departments at Washington who carry responsibility for the protection of our national security."

Italy Sets Up 'Dictatorship' To Ration Food, Materials

By the United Press

Rome, Dec. 31.—Premier Benito Mussolini today ordered a strengthening of his "Lictor Line" of defenses along the Alpine frontier with Germany, Switzerland and France as the high command reported heavy Italian blows by land, sea and air on the Albanian and North African fronts.

Today's war communique was more encouraging than any in several weeks and followed authoritative Fascist predictions that "the moment is at hand" when reorganized Italian forces will strike back at the British and Greek armies holding Italian soil in Albania and Libya.

Mussolini's orders for bolstering the Lictor Line were revealed in a decree published in the official gazette, authorizing Italian military authorities to increase expenses for military works there.

Today's war communique reported that Italian warships had carried out an "intensive shelling" of British and Greek bases and supply centers on the Greek-Albanian coast and achieved "visible results."

Meanwhile, squadrons of Italian bombers were bombarding Greece's key Aegean port of Salonika, Preveza seaport and airdromes at Jouanina and Kotzani, it was stated.

On the Albanian land front, the communique reported fighting "of a local character" in which considerable losses in arms and men were said to have been inflicted on the Greeks.

One British plane was said to have been shot down in flames Monday night when formations of R. A. F. planes flew over portions of southern Italy "dropping rockets."

On the Libyan front, where Italian troops are holding off Britain's siege of Bardia, the Fascist high command reported "action by artillery and chasers which bombed and machine-gunned a group of enemy tanks and armored cars, repulsing and damaging them while they were atempting to approach our positions."

Industrial Control Tightened

By the Associated Press

Rome, Dec. 31.—Italy tightened her war economy another notch today by establishing a virtual dictatorship over her industry.

This all-powerful post fell to 45-year-old Renato Ricci, minister of guilds and veteran Fascist Party stalwart. He will have the final say in the handling and distribution of all raw materials and will determine which products are to be turned over to the army and which may be left for civilian consumption.

The announcement of the strict control over industry followed by four days the appointment of Giuseppe Tassinari, minister of agriculture, as dictator of food with control over production and consumption, exports and imports and imports, and distribution to both civilians and the armed forces.

Still another decree, published today in the official gazette, clamped down severe control on the slaughter of cattle and hogs. The livestock section of the National Federation of Provincial Consortiums was assigned the task of determing the amount of cattle and hogs needed for slaughtering, as well as that of distributing the meat.

Ricci was given power to ration industrial products and apportion raw materials among industrial establishments according to the nation's war requirements.

All Britain To Fight Fires

so much havoc in London Sunday night.

Announcing this intention, Herbert Morrison, minister of home security, nevertheless urged the people not to wait for "all that," but immediately to form a civil defense home guard so that not a single building in British towns would be left unwatched.

"Compulsion," he said in a radio broadcast, "will apply to everyone of every grade—managers and office workers, as well as manual workers—as the needs of the situation may require. Factories and businesses of all kinds, large and small, will be subject to severe penalties for any neglect of their obligations."

Morrison's ministry announced it was arranging an immediate house-to-house and office-to-office canvass in a drive for organization of fire-watching parties and that 8,000,000 leaflets were being distributed to instruct the public "How to Protect Your Home, Your Business, and Your City."

Morrison said "You can stop a fire bomb from starting a fire" by smothering it and the regular fire brigades must be left free to fight the big blazes.

"Every group of houses and business premises must have its fire-watching party," he said. "Every party must guard its own group of buildings. Each household must, if possible, provide at least one member, man or woman, for its party."

He forecast the "shrewd and crafty enemy would be beaten.

This expression followed a declaration by Sir George Wilkinson, London's Lord Mayor, that the city's Guildhall never would have been destroyed Sunday night had small nearby fires been controlled more quickly.

Too, the press had sharply criticized "irresponsible property owners."

Upon the home defense front, Lord Woolton, the food minister, urged that the people eat more homegrown potatoes and oats. He warned them "we shall have to do with less meat in 1941."

Mrs. Wolfe Dies, D. C. Clubwoman; Funeral Friday

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Wolfe, 58, active clubwoman and a lifelong resident of the District, died yesterday at her residence, 1116 C Street Southeast.

Born in Anacostia, Mrs. Wolfe was a member of the Daughters of America, Shepherd of Bethlehem Society, Royal Neighbors of America, and the Sons and Daughters of Liberty.

Surviving are her husband, John W. Wolfe; three sons, Charles Dunn, of University Park, Md.; Louis Wolfe, of Baltimore, and Morris F. Wolfe, of Washington; three daughters, Mrs. Guinette Streitz, Mrs. Clara L. Marcellino, and Mrs. Mary C. Marsh; and a sister, Mrs. Bertha M. Adams, of Edgewater, Md.

Funeral services will be at the home at 2:30 p. m. Friday, with burial in Loudoun Park Cemetery, Baltimore.

Cuba Appoints Dr. Fernandez Envoy to U. S.

Havana, Dec. 31 (AP).—Dr. Aurelio Fernandez Concheso, minister of the presidency, officially announced today his appointment as new Cuban Ambassador to Washington.

He succeeds Dr. Pedro Martinez Fraga, who recently resigned.

Amadeo Lopez Castro, former secretary of the treasury and agriculture, was named new minister of the presidency.

Dr. Fernandez Concheso was formerly minister to Peru and Germany. He has represented Cuba in the League of Nations.

Rites Tomorrow For Mrs. Hall, Revenue Employe

Funeral services for Mrs. Mina Pairo Hall, employe of the Bureau of Internal Revenue for 23 years, will be held tomorrow at 10 a. m. in her home, 31 Rhode Island Avenue Northwest.

She died Monday in Emergency Hospital.

A native Washingtonian, she was the wife of Richard E. Hall, a real estate dealer, and the daughter of the late Dr. William E. Pairo. She leaves her husband, two brothers, Barton W. and Edwin T. Pairo, and two sisters, Mrs. Charlotte Thompson and Mrs. Wilfred A. Nicholas.

Burial will be in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Ford Takes Appeal To Supreme Court

Contests Finding Of Unfair Practices By Labor Board

By the United Press

The Ford Motor Co., center of a dispute over award of defense contracts, yesterday carried its three-year-old fight with the National Labor Relations Board to the Supreme Court.

Appealing a board order holding it guilty of unfair labor practices at its Dearborn, Mich., plant, the company charged in a brief to the tribunal that the NLRB considered its case with "bias and prejudice."

The action specifically was in the nature of a petition for review of a Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals (Cincinnati) ruling upholding the board on all but one count against the company—a charge that distribution of a statement of Henry Ford's labor views to his employes was an unfair labor practice. The Government was understood to be considering an appeal from that portion of the decision.

It was the first of nine cases involving Labor Board charges against the company at plants in various cities to reach the Supreme Court for decision on its merits. Today's action sought review of the NLRB order growing out of labor disturbances in 1937.

Hillman Overruled

The appeal for review of the Dearborn case came in the midst of a controversy over propriety of awarding defense contracts to Ford. Sidney Hillman, labor member of the Defense Commission, opposed such awards on the ground Ford had been found by the NLRB to have violated the Wagner Act.

Last Friday the War Department in effect overruled Hillman's protest and announced that a contract to the Ford Co. for 1,500 light reconnaissance motor cars costing $2,000,000 would be allowed to stand.

Among the points on which the Ford Co. challenged the Labor Board's decree involving the Dearborn (River Rouge plant) case were:

1. The board "prejudged" the case prior to hearing evidence or argument. The prejudgment, it said, was shown "by the press releases of the board and the public statements of one of its members and its general counsel . . ."

2. A charge that the NLRB examiner hearing the case was guilty of "misconduct," showing friendliness for the United Automobile Workers and hostility toward witnesses for the company.

Evidence Disputed

3. In connection with the board's finding that an alleged assault by Ford employes on U. A. W. members at the River Rouge plant in 1937 was an action of the company constituting an unfair labor practice, the company said the board made "no basic findings of fact to support its conclusions and revealed no theory by which its conclusion could be sustained."

The Sixth Circuit Court, in upholding the board on all counts except that concerning distribution of the Ford statement of labor views, also had ruled that, as to one worker, the evidence did not support the finding that he was discharged for activity in the U. A. W. The board had ordered reinstatement of 24 men on that ground.

Union Asks Election

Detroit, Dec. 31 (AP).—The United Automobile Workers petitioned the National Labor Relations Board here today for an employe election in the Lincoln plant of the Ford Motor Co. to determine whether the U. A. W should be granted exclusive bargaining rights.

R. J. Thomas, the union's president, said today's petition stated that 95 per cent of the Lincoln employes had designated the union as their collective bargaining agent.

New Year Unites Mother and Her Soldier Son

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

NEW YEAR'S REUNION—The new year had an extra happy beginning for Mrs. Letha Whittaker, of Chicago, for her son, Ora Lester Brewer, whom she had believed dead 12 years, returned home yesterday. The son, 18, is a private in infantry at Fort McClellan, Ala., and obtained a special furlough after he recently located his mother

Son Woman Believed Dead 12 Years Returns—a Soldier

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Dec. 31.—The son she believed for 12 years was dead came home today to Mrs. Letha Whittaker, 42, who finally managed to say, with tears in her eyes, that it was "a real happy New Year."

Private Ora Lester Brewer, 18, of Company C, Twenty-second Infantry, stationed at Fort McClellan, Anniston, Ala., rang the bell and his mother opened the door.

"It sure is great to have a mother again after all these years," said the boy.

"I've got a 15-day furlough and I'm going to spend every minute of it right here. We'll have a grand New Year's celebration."

His father, William Brewer, died in 1925. His mother left him with his maternal grandmother in Quincy, Ill., and came to Chicago to work. She remarried Frank Whittaker, from whom she had been divorced in 1929, and in 1928 wrote to Quincy to have her son come to Chicago.

A letter came, in a strange handwriting, that said Ora was "dead and buried." She said she was so stunned she never did learn about the family misunderstanding that led to that report.

Brewer was in Quincy recently and learned from friends his mother was here.

Labor Expects Year to Bring 5,000,000 Jobs

Practical Abolition Of Unemployment Predicted by Green

By the Associated Press

American labor stood on the threshold of another year yesterday facing the prospect of employment for millions in an industrial machine geared up for national defense, and hearing union leaders declare their support of the defense program.

The absorption of from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 workers by industries producing war materials and the ordinary commodities for domestic consumption has been predicted by Government statisticians for 1941.

About 4,000,000 workers, these statisticians say, will be needed to produce the aircraft, fighting ships, guns, powder, buildings, food and clothing contemplated for national defense and aid to Britain.

Green Predicts 6,000,000 Jobs

At the same time, the expanding pay rolls in these industries are expected to stimulate employment in the nondefense field to such an extent that jobs will be provided for another 2,000,000 workers.

A. F. of L. President William Green predicted in a New Year statement that the impact of armament building on industry would create 6,000,000 jobs and the army of unemployed, he added, "will have practically disappeared."

C. I. O. President Philip Murray saw 1941 as the year of "great expansion of organization activity on behalf of labor and of the Nation.

"The millions of workers who make up the C. I. O. come from the basic mass production industries," he said. "Upon their labor and their loyalty depends the production of all that is most essential to industrial stability and national defense.

Workers Patriotic

"As patriotic Americans, the workers in these basic industries desire to make their full contribution to the welfare of their country and the defense of its institutions."

Murray said the C. I. O.'s collective agreements had "preserved substantial industrial peace" by providing orderly democratic means for the adjustment of differences.

On the same question, Green said not a single strike by an A. F. of L. union "impeded the defense program" and added:

"We are pressing for wider and even more effective self-discipline among our organizations, we are preparing to assume new burdens nad sacrifices whenever necessary, but we also insist on our democratic rights."

Owner Gives Million-Dollar Oil Company to Home Town

By the Associated Press

Mount Joy, Pa., Dec. 31.—This community became the amazed inheritor today of a thriving million-dollar oil company, the gift of owner Clarence Schock, who believes that "a man's estate should go to the general welfare."

SCHOCK

The childless, 75-year-old executive announced last night he had created a community trust estate which now is the sole stockholder of the Schock Independent Oil Company. Except for a "limited part" to be reserved for the donor and his wife, all company earnings go to the community.

"The laws of our land which provide for the inheritance of property are unethical and unChristian," he said.

"After reasonable provision for women and children, a man's estate should go to the general welfare in conformity with the Christian teaching that every man is his brother."

He also announced the initial distribution of $20,000 to the public school districts of Lancaster County, for use as the school directors deem best.

"Only time and experience can determine the best use of this (company) income," Schock said. "For the time being it seems that some service in and under the direction of the public schools districts is best."

There was no announcement of the company's annual earnings.

An additional motive, said Schock, was a desire to perpetuate his business so that employes will continue to have permanent positions.

The oil company is the outgrowth of Schock's father's original coal, grain and lumber company. Schock entered that at the age of 21, and became owner in 1935.

"Any man with children," the donor said, in the announcement, "is more or less likely to conform with the established custom of passing his property on to his children, and under the law he can justify so doing. However, if all adult children receive no inheritance whatever, then all young men would start out with equal opportunity. Work and hardships develop character. There is generally enough time for pleasure and play without providing for it by inheritance."

Democratic Committee Moves Into 25-Room Suite at Hotel

The Democratic National Committee moved to a new home yesterday.

It forsook its 18-room National Press Building headquarters of the last ten years for a 25-room suite at the Mayflower Hotel.

Chairman Edward J. Flynn is scheduled to take up residence in a three-room apartment tomorrow at the same hotel.

The committee decided on the shift because it found the 18 rooms too small and was unable to obtain further space in the already crowded Press Building, it was stated.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation had acquired several rooms formerly occupied by the committee after the latter moved to New York in mid-August, and the party organization was unable to get the rooms back on returning here in November.

While both hotel and committee officials refused to divulge the rental price of the 25-room Mayflower headquarters (Rooms 201 to 225), it was understood to triple or quadruple the approximately $1,000 per month the party paid for the Press Building suite.

Flynn's apartment is said to include a parlor and two bedrooms. Similar apartments rent at the Mayflower for $400 monthly.

The committee staff had not fully completed its moving-in arrangements last night. The customary battery of telephones had yet to be connected, for example, and a single wire had to serve all calls. It will be "business as usual" in short order, however, officials promised.

New Destroyer Here for Inspection

The U. S. Madison, one of the recent Navy destroyers, was at the Navy Yard yesterday for a routine inspection. She came up the Potomac to her dock Sunday afternoon.

Launched last year at Quincy, Mass., the Madison displaces 1,750 tons. She is commanded by Lieut. Comdr. Thomas Boyce.

Final Census Total Is 150,621,231

Final returns from the 1940 census yesterday put the total population of the United States and all its Territories and possessions at 150,621,231, an increase of 8.8 per cent over the 138,439,069 counted in 1930.

The 1940 final figure for the continental United States was 131,669,275, or 7.2 per cent more than the 122,775,046 of 1930.

Traffic Deaths In D. C. Lowest In Ten Years

While it was reported that highway fatalities throughout the Nation increased approximately 7 per cent during the year, Washington had a decrease of about 6½ per cent, according to Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer.

December, however, with 12 of the total deaths, was the worst month in two years. In December, 1938, 18 persons were killed. Traffic authorities said more cars were on the streets during the last month of 1940 due to the absence of snow and ice.

Official records do not list the death of Robert L. Genella, 21, of Bethesda, Md., killed in a motorcycle accident at the end of Sixty-third Street Northeast last October. Van Duzer said the accident occurred on private property over which the District has no jurisdiction. The death occurred within the city limits.

Perhaps the year's most sensational traffic accident was the case of 26-year-old Richard S. Nestlerode, now serving a 15-year-to-life term in connection with the deaths of two persons June 22.

The youth was apprehended after a wild police chase through various sections of the city during which he struck several other autos, a street car and the two pedestrians. His victims were Joseph Nappo, 59, of 1250 Tenth Street Northwest, struck at Ninth and M Streets, and Enda Mitchell, colored, 41, of 814 Twelfth Street Northeast, struck at Twelfth and H Streets Northeast.

In another instance, Michael Pastore, 20, Fort Myer soldier, was trampled to death by a runaway horse on Bladensburg Road Northeast May 15. The horse became frightened, bolted his traces and Pastore was killed trying to subdue the animal.

A colored man, struck and killed by a street car at Thirteenth and U Streets Northeast June 8 was not identified throughout the year.

War Work Dominates British Honors List

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 31.—King George VI selected Lord Camrose, 61-year-old owner of London's conservative Daily Telegraph and Morning Post, to head his New Year's honors list today.

Camrose, now a baron, was made a viscount.

The list, the second of the war, also created four new barons and three baronets and conferred other distinctions on men and women in many fields of endeavor, in which airplane, arms and ship production were prominently represented.

It was the eighth honors list of the monarch's reign.

The new barons created were:

Field Marshal Sir William Edmund Ironside, 60, former chief of the imperial general staff and former commander of the British home forces.

Lord Hugh Cecil, 61, churchman and member of the distinguished Salisbury family, and provost of Eton since 1936.

Sir Robert Kindersley, 69, who started work at 15 for ten shillings a week and lately captained Britain's voluntary war savings campaign, raising more than 475,000,000 pounds sterling ($1,900,000,000).

Sir Boyd Merriman, president of the probate, divorce and admiralty division of the high court of justice, which decides the fate of seized enemy ships and cargoes. He was the judge who gave the present Duchess of Windsor her divorce from Ernest Simpson on May 3, 1937.

New baronetcies went to Sir William Coxen, 73, former Lord Mayor of London who raised 5,000,000 pounds sterling for war charities; Sir Kenneth Lee, 61, former director-general of the ministry of information; and Hugh Lett, president of the Royal College of Surgeons.

The long list, filling 86 columns, included many naval and Royal Air Force recipients of awards. Among them was Lord Louis Mountbatten, the King's cousin, who was created companion of the distinguished service order.

Commanding a flotilla, he brought the destroyer Kelly safely to port in May after she was crippled by a torpedo and attacked by German warplanes. In November he brought the destroyer Javelin home after a torpedo and bomb attack.

Women were on the honor list, four become dames commander of the Order of the British Empire. They were Irene Vanbrugh, 73, veteran actress; the Dowager Marchioness of Reading, chairman of the women's voluntary services; Viscountess Craigavon, widow of the late Prime Minister of Northern Ireland, and Miss Marjorie Maxse, the latter for services to the Children's Overseas Reception Board.

The Order of Merit, which has but 24 members, was given to Prof. Gilbert Murray, 74, noted Greek scholar who was the Charles Eliot Norton professor of poetry at Harvard in 1926.

Hitler Forecasts Victory in 1941

humanitarianism has prevented us from retaliating to Churchill's crimes," Hitler said in his proclamation to the Nazis.

"Now, however, the war will be carried out to its final consequences. It is no empty phrase—but spoken in bloody seriousness—when we say that for each R. A. F. bomb dropped, 10 or 100 will be hurled back at them."

Hitler's chiefs of the army, air force and navy likewise looked towards speedy victory. Admiral Prentzel, speaking for the navy, said "Britain will be forced to capitulate through ever-increasing attacks upon her shipping, ports, dockyards, traffic, industrial centers, and armament plants.

"By the end of 1940, far more than one-third of British tonnage has been destroyed."

Repeatedly in his two statements Hitler accused capitalists of trying deliberately to prolong the war in order to increase profits.

"The war must be continued according to the will of the warmongers and their capitalistic supporters," he said.

"You have defeated the enemy's fighting forces by strength of arms, but you have conquered the occupied territories morally by your proud attitude and excellent discipline," Hitler told his soldiers.

"Armed as never before, we stand at the beginning of a new year . . . this year will bring completion of the greatest victory in our history."

Hitler began his proclamation to the Nazis with his old charges that Britain rejected German offers of arms limitation and refused "Lebensraum" and security for Germany. Without directly mentioning the United States, he assailed "misery and riches" and pointed to "ten or twelve million jobless."

Capitalists who have interests in armament industries, he said, look for a "long war, because it is to their capitalistic interest to profit from their investments for the longest possible period."

Hitler reiterated his charges that the democracies rejected his pre-war proposals, and said:

"If the people had realized that war was necessary, that neither England nor France had the slightest claims, then the danger might arise that the people themselves would call their democratic destroyers to account.

Without mentioning Mr. Roosevelt, Hitler then struck out with:

"Therefore it is necessary for them today to come before the people with the stupid and infamous lie that Germany or Italy wanted to conquer the world.

"In reality, the already existing world conquerors need wars to obtain higher interest than they have already obtained on their capital."

"Nineteen forty-one will see the German army, navy and air force greatly strengthened with improved equipment. Then will come the last phases of the war. The criminals will break down under our blows. Thus, finally, will the preconditions for a real understanding among peoples be created.

"Those who have been interested in causing unrest and wars for decades must be destroyed. It is our relentless decision that this verdict be given, so that Europe may again find inner peace. Whatever may happen, Germany with cool determination will take all steps necessary for achievement of this aim.

"Any power eating from these democracies will die.

"If Churchill and his international democratic companions today declare they will defend their world, and that their world cannot exist besides ours, then it is their own hard luck.

"We enter 1941 with the conviction that the Nazi peoples' rights will triumph over plutocratic privileges."

Hitler then warned in "bloody seriousness" of the intensified war to come, then scouted the idea that luck is turning against him. "In this war it is not luck but justice which will triumph in the end . . . the struggle for existence by those fighting for their endangered existence will spur them to the most enormous accomplishments in the world's history . . .

"American politicians created the high-spirited conception that basically this is an effort of the 'have-nots' to get something. That's okay (Hitler employed the Americanism) with us.

"While the other side wants to take what little the 'have-nots' retain, we face the 'haves' with determination to fight for general human rights. This struggle is no attack on the rights of other people, but it is only against the encroachment of the greed of the thin capitalistic upper class, which does not want to realize that the time is past when gold ruled the world.

Greetings

to more than a million owners and friends

TO EACH AND EVERY ONE of you million and more loyal Pontiac owners—no matter whether you drive a shining new 1941 "Torpedo" or a road-scarred veteran of many years—we send our greetings and our best wishes for a happy and prosperous New Year.

And at the same time we want to thank you for your valued contributions to Pontiac's success.

When last night's bells tolled the end of another year, Pontiac completed the most fruitful twelve months in its history. During 1940, some 240,000 new Pontiacs were purchased—more than during any previous year.

Naturally we are pleased with this record. However, our pleasure is tempered with gratitude, because we are deeply mindful of the fact that to you, our good friends, must go much of the credit.

The satisfaction you have had from your Pontiacs and the good things you have had to say about them to your friends and your friends' friends—these have played a leading part in establishing 1940 as the greatest year in Pontiac history.

It is for that reason that we take this occasion to offer you our warmest thanks.

U. S. Aircraft Engines Best, Scientists Told

Nation 'Bodly Misled' On Speed of European Types, Expert Says

By Howard W. Blakeslee.
Associated Press Science Editor

Philadelphia, Dec. 31.—The American Association for the Advancement of Science was told today that American experts have been "badly misled" about the speed of European-type engines the United States is now putting into quantity production for fighting planes.

Dr. Jerome C. Hunsaker, head of Massachusetts Institute of Technology's aeronautics department, said an American-designed, air-cooled engine is just as fast and much more powerful.

The European engines are liquid-cooled.

The American engine, he explained, has 2,000 horsepower, compared with the 1,200 produced by the engines now used in German and English fighting planes and beginning to come off American production lines.

This American engine, he said, can make obsolete all present fighter planes of the world, including our own. It is planned for bombers.

The American type has 25 per cent less weight, costs half as much.

R. A. F. Praises U. S. Craft

London, Dec. 31 (AP).—American aircraft, flown to England under their own power, are being dispatched to the Middle East in increasing numbers and have proved their effectiveness there already, a Royal Air Force spokesman said today.

The disclosure indicated the American-made planes might be use against Italians in Africa or Albania, or both.

The spokesman characterized as "entirely incorrect" British press statements that the American craft had proven inferior to British planes.

American aircraft will prove a decisive factor in the air war in 1941, the R. A. F. said.

The spokesman said Adolf Hitler probably would try to invade England again in March, and added: "But I do not think any invasion can succeed unless there is a condition of air superiority on the German side."

C. J. Cassidy's Funeral Set For Tomorrow

Washington Building Firm's Head Died Monday at 70

Funeral services for Charles J. Cassidy, 70, who died Monday of a heart ailment at his home, 1063 Michigan Avenue Northeast, will be held tomorrow at 9 a. m. with requiem mass at St. Anthony's Church. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Mr. Cassidy was president of the Charles J. Cassidy Co., builders, with offices at 1507 Eleventh Street Northwest. He built the Mullen Memorial Library and the Science Building at Catholic University and the Chapel and Refectory Building at Trinity College, and at the time of his death was directing work on Trinity's new Science Building. Other buildings he constructed included the Shrine of the Sacred Heart Church and the First National Bank Building in Alexandria.

He was born in Washington, the son of the late Peter A. and Margaret Cassidy, and received his education in parochial schools and by night study after beginning work as a young man. He was a life member of Washington Lodge, No. 15, of the Elks, and a member of Potomac Council, Knights of Columbus, and of the Holy Name Society of St. Anthony's Church.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Augusta E. Cassidy; a son, Charles Cassidy, jr., and three daughters, Mrs. Mary Louise Peck, Miss Betty Jane Cassidy, and Miss Margaret M. Cassidy.

Back in D. C., Sailor Tells War Odyssey

A 36-year-old District man who abruptly disappeared from his place of employment here more than a year ago returned to work on the dot of 10 a. m. yesterday, bearing an eye-witness tale of a Nazi "blitz" and an adventure story that rivals an E. Philips Oppenheim thriller.

CRABTREE

George Crabtree—home address as yet undetermined—picked up a keen knife in an F Street drug store Monday and returned to what now must be the prosaic job of making sandwiches.

Crabtree, who weighs 142 pounds and is 5-feet-7-inches tall, in the meantime had been a sailor aboard a Swedish ship captured by the Germans, had experienced the sensation of having the boat bombed and sunk beneath his feet, and finally had been stranded penniless in Europe.

But to hear him tell it you'd think he had been taking a rest cure for nerves unstrung by the tension accompanying a job on a sandwich board.

"I sailed as a cook aboard the Swedish steamship John bound for Buenos Aires on November 28, 1939," he said yesterday. "Then, on December 14, we had to stop for two days outside Montevideo because of the battle between the Graf Spee and British ships. That was a wow of a battle."

Crabtree related how the steamship John had been stopped later off the coast of Iceland by a British battleship, bearing only the name "H. M. S.," which had taken it to Kirkwall, Scotland, where the ship was searched completely before being released.

After reaching Landscrona, Sweden, on March 20, Crabtree said, he and the crew of the steamship John were transferred to another Swedish ship, the steamship Theodore, which sailed for Baltimore with a cargo of wood pulp only to be captured by a German cruiser. The German cruiser, he said, took the steamship Theodore to Narvik, Norway, "the night the Nazi invasion began there."

Crabtree spoke of his adventures at Narvik with excitement:

"Those Nazis slaughtered 3,000 English and Norwegian soldiers," he said. "They took machine-guns and shot soldiers swimming in the icy water. After the battle it was estimated that 20,000 Norwegian soldiers had rifles that wouldn't shoot because the firing pins had been removed.

"From August 28 to December 5 I stayed in a room over a beauty parlor in Stockholm," Crabtree said. He added that his passport and papers had been lost aboard the S. S. Theodore, and that he had no way to prove he was an American. He was also broke.

"Finally," he said, "I heard about a Countess Bernadotte, who is an American. I went out to see her and she loaned me 2,000 Swedish crowns ($540).

"I couldn't get away and finally my money got so low that I caught a plane to Barcelona, where I stayed two days and then flew to Lisbon, where the U. S. Consul signed me aboard the S. S. Excambion (U. S. ship) as a work-a-way at a penny a month.

"I got into Jersey City about 10 a. m. Christmas Eve, and when I saw the shoreline I began singing 'God Bless America.'"

Crabtree said he could give Britain a diagram of the place where the German liner Bremen is now docked. "The Bremen and the Europa are tied together up a small stream about 9 nautical miles from Hamburg," he said.

Just about that time Crabtree, who is a native of Kinston, N. C., discovered it was time to go back to work on the sandwich board.

"One ham on rye," called a soda clerk. "One ham on rye," echoed Crabtree.

52,000,000 Security Cards Given in Year

By the Associated Press

Arthur J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board, said in his annual report yesterday that "more than 52,000,000 men and women" employed in industry and commerce now have social security accounts.

He said the board approved daily approximately 1,000 benefit claims by retired wage earners and their aged wives, widows, orphans and dependent parents of workers who have died. It approved nearly 237,000 claims in the first 11 months of 1940, the first year they became effective, and benefit payments now total $4,250,000 each month.

Altmeyer said that "more than 28,000,000 workers" now have unemployment insurance. Benefits totaled almost $56,000,000 in July and approximately $29,600,000 in November, the last month for which figures are available.

Cites Gain in Jobs

"This," he said, "undoubtedly reflects increasing employment throughout the country. However, total benefits for 1940 come to about $520,000,000, every dollar of which went into the pockets of men and women temporarily without jobs, and thereby helped to stabilize communities' buying power."

In October, he said, the United States Employment Service found jobs for more than 400,000 unemployed workers—an all-time high. The number of placements dropped to 365,000 in November, reducing the registered active job seekers to 4,500,000 or less than one-half as many as once were registered. Placements during 1940 were well above 3,500,000 and the total for the last seven years is close to 32,000,000, Altmeyer said.

He reported that assistance payments of more than $619,000,000 were made from combined Federal and State funds to 2,933,000 needy aged, needy blind and to dependent children during 1940.

McNutt Urges Change

Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator, declared in a year-end statement that steps should be taken to "rationalize the varying practices now prevalent from State to State and to make old-age assistance more adequate and equitable in the protection it affords to the needy aged."

Present old-age assistance payments vary widely in the States. The Federal Government will contribute up to $20 a month for individual assistance, but requires that its contribution be matched dollar for dollar by the State. Some States are able to put up only relatively small amounts; others take full advantage of the Federal offer.

The Administration is reported studying a proposal for flat $20-a-month payments by the Federal Government, regardless of the State contribution.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

PATRICIA PROCHNIK, Washington's 24-carat society nightingale, daughter of the former Austrian Minister, will open at the Troika next Tuesday. This will be the blonde Patricia's first professional night spot engagement, though she has sung with Meyer Davis orchestras at many society parties this fall and winter. Take a good look at the glowing star sapphire now decorating Patricia's right hand. It's a gift from someone whose initial's are T. A., and there's talk that it really belongs on the third finger, left hand . . . Valya Valentino, the gifted young male ballet dancer who appeared in last week's show at the Capitol, also will join the Troika revue next Tuesday.

Fastest change ever from "civvies" to uniform is being made by the boy half of the Dale and Temple dance team at Loius. In two seconds flat he changes from a gray suit to khaki right on the dance floor. It's possible because one suit is what show people call a "break-away."

THE NEW "BALKAN ROOM," sister attraction of the Neptune Room, is due to open in about a week. It will occupy the space of the present Earle restaurant, be giddily decorated in high color, sport a sumptuous circular bar, receive the Neptune Room music of Milt Herth's Trio and Gene Archer via loud speaker. And talk about electrification! The food will be kept in electric thermotainers, and "electric eyes" will open the kitchen doors for the waitresses.

THANKS, THANKS, THANKS, for all those handsome and original Christmas greetings that stacked our columnist's desk last week. Biggest card in town was that sent out by Osgood Roberts, publicity director of the Mayflower. It was about a foot square, featured a double portion of "Ozzie's" finest smile. All the musical lads were very clever about twining melody into their greetings. Most of the Noeletters were from around town, but we hear from St. Clair and Day (former Shoreham) in Hollywood, Maria Karson (former Mayfair) in Ohio and Marianne Cude now decorating the New York hit, "Panama Hattie."

JUNGLE CHARM is all over the place in Del Rio's new Tropicana Room, a place even finer in reality than it was in prospect. The leaf-roofed huts and band stand, cocoanut lighted, look as though they'd been lifted right out of a movie setting. The new Don Martinic band plays a wicked conga and Luis Gonzales sings and swings the maracas with the authentic Cuban touch . . .

JIM FITZPATRICK, saxophone expert of the Rainbow Room orchestra

Fresh surprises are due soon at Del Rio.

Sammy Ferro, tympani boy with Paul Kain in Mayfair, has inspiredly solved the problem of keeping down the volume of his big bass drum. He just got a big powder puff from the 5-and-dime, affixed it to the drum's beating spot.

MELODY AS YOU LIKE IT. The piano-vocaling of Kay Howard and Vic Nini in Ciro's Famous Village. Smooth and spicy as "Mayor" Ciro's spaghetti . . . That strange composition that Sonny James' orchestra plays in the Metronome Room only after they've been worked up to a certain pitch. It's the joint composition of the band, has no name, no sheet music—but the sweep of a forest fire . . . The contagious blend of "Oui, Oui, Marie" and "Rose Marie" that Jean Cathon warbles in La Salle Versailles . . . The weird power of 'Hawaiian War Chant" when played with vibraharp undertones by Don Carper's Four in Cafe Caprice . . . The saucy South American rhythm dished up by the Madrillon's Trio Lirico . . . "She Likes What I Like," brightly amusing li'l ditty being caroled by the Lounge Riviera's wandering minstrel, Jack Norman.

NEW YEAR'S FROCKS. Hi Hat's Carmela Lazari blossomed out in champagne satin and tulle, graced with a brown and yellow orchid on New Year's Eve . . . The Anchor Room's Eileen George looked like a bouquet in pink chiffon with flowers showing through in cloudlike effect . . . Right before New Year's, Beverly Stull, of Burt's Trans-Lux, appeared in a Christmas card frock of red crepe with a black velvet bib and heavy gold jewelry.

SPARE TIME. Grace Shannon, leader of the "swing section" in Bob Simpson's Cosmos Room orchestra, spends her spare time in teaching a class of 70 piano pupils . . . Abe Clar, gifted pianist-violinist with the Barnee-Lowe orchestra at the Shoreham, is using his off hours in composing a symphony as part of his Catholic University music course . . . When Roger Morigi, brother-in-law of Bill Kavakos, isn't mixing drinks in Kavakos' Grill he's busy sculpturing. He worked on the cornices of the new Municipal Building and the Supreme Court Building.

George Smith, extra special singer and bassist, has just joined Jack ("Jive") Schafer's band at the Casino Royal, is proving a great addition to this lively outfit.

NEW YEAR'S DAY DINING. You'll find a Lucullan luxury dinner at the Pall Mall Room, where Maitre d'Hotel Arthur Marchisio takes great pride in elegant service and food . . . At the highly attractive Silver Fox out Chevy Chase way you'll enjoy the tenderest of steak or chicken dinners . . . The Harrington Tavern is serving a special New Year's Day dinner featuring luscious roast turkey . . . Drop into Dick's Grill if you have a fancy for sampling some of Virginia's finest ham . . . Restaurant 823 Fifteenth Street is noted for dinners delicious and substantial—real "men's" food."

YOUNG FELLOWS' BAND. Rodd Raffell's band at the Nightingale is probably the youngest for many miles around. All of the 14 boys are between 21 and 24 years' old. Naturally, they bring loads of youthful zest to their melody making, look down their noses at any number that isn't strictly streamlined.

And a Happy New Year to youse all, every one of you! May you find all of 1941 as joyous and care-free as was its beginning last night.

D. C. Guard's Dilemma

The acceleration of construction at Fort Meade may spare nearby units of the National Guard from further upsetting delays and false starts, though there still is no great certainty when the work will be finished. Hampered by a carpenters' strike and by a situation in which—to put it conservatively—the builders could not get all the workmen they could use, the Army completed only 10 per cent of the project between October 3 and December 1. The end of the month, however, finds Fort Meade's new buildings about a third ready.

Obviously there will have to be an even greater speed-up if Fort Meade is to receive the Twenty-ninth Division of the National Guard by February 3, the date mentioned in the latest tentative order from the Adjutant General. These 18,786 officers and men, comprising with a few exceptions all the National Guard of the District, Maryland and Virginia, first were warned to expect active service January 3 to 19. Their experience, therefore, is similar to that of the 260th Coast Artillery, a District National Guard organization outside the Twenty-ninth Division. The 260th received a warning order for November 15, but this was canceled because Fort Bliss was not ready. It has been said that subsequent uncertainty about the call for the 260th forced many to give up their jobs without a promise of reemployment because they were unable to give proper notice; that those in Government service could not be replaced efficiently for the same reason; and that opportunities to sublet houses and apartments were lost. Moreover, the 260th's own technical preparations were hampered when, after the President signed induction orders for January 6, the Guard was not officially notified for five days.

Officials who govern induction of the National Guard, a voluntary organization, cannot afford to overlook the effect of such treatment on morale. Undoubtedly the Army is encountering immense difficulties and delays, but it should be possible to refrain from issuing orders until there is some certainty when a cantonment will be completed. At that point the guardsmen should be given a date they can depend upon, along with sufficient time to make their break with civilian life. Surely they must be spared a situation in which they have to risk either giving up their jobs and homes only to find themselves still out of the Army, or leaving civilian life without composing their affairs.

Three States Disgraced

Every American ought to be chagrined at the report coming from Tuskegee Institute showing an increase in lynchings last year. It is true that the total number of these mob murders is not large. Only four lives were claimed by infuriated gangs taking the law into their own hands, compared with three lynchings in 1939. But that black mark against American democracy seems particularly inexcusable at a time when this Nation is throwing its influence into the balance against barbarous practices in other parts of the world.

Of course, the report from Tuskegee is not without its brighter aspects. The victims of mob violence in 1940 were only half as numerous as they were in both 1936 and 1937. The current report is the most favorable for any year, except 1939. Tuskegee's department of records and research found, moreover, that 28 persons had been saved from the hands of mobs by officers of the law. Obviously the law-enforcement officials of the Southern States are far more diligent in protecting the lives of accused persons than they were a few years ago. And all but three of the States kept their records entirely clear of lynchings in 1940.

Those three States—Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee—have taken the full disgrace of the 1940 lynchings upon themselves. A year ago every State except Florida and Mississippi had cleared its records. Was it the stigma which attached to them for keeping this barbarous custom alive in 1939 that inspired Mississippi and Florida to prevent mob murders within their borders during 1940? In any event, the three States which permitted mob violence to be substituted for fair trial in 1940 should now feel the full reproach of the American people for these outrages. The indignation of the people will be intensified by the fact that one of the Negroes who was lynched was merely attempting to qualify to vote. Another met his fate, according to the Tuskegee report, because of an "altercation with a white man."

Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee owe a duty to the American people to prevent any recurrence of this disgusting practice in 1941. If they devote themselves earnestly to that task, it will be accomplished far more satisfactorily than it ever could be through the enactment of an unconstitutional Federal anti-lynching law.

So What?

The fact that the Nazis made peace offers last winter is not so sensational as it sounds in the mouth of Verne Marshall or in the play given to it by the newspapers. Nor that the Germans used an American mediator or sounded out the United States Government. Anybody who has even an average memory will recall the Nazi peace offensive starting October 6, 1939. And anybody who was in Europe last winter could testify to the fact that till May 10 the European air was thick with the subsequent engagements after the main battle.

The offensive started after the subjugation of Poland in the form of a peace offer from the Fuehrer himself. Addressing the Reichstag, he proposed a conference to give Europe "a sense of security," renewed his earlier blessing on the ideals of disarmament, and hinted at the solution of all outstanding problems. He even said he would be kind to the Jews. Now was the time, said a Berlin spokesman afterward, for a mediator to step in and mediate. But nobody budged, and the offer, therefore, fell flat.

Undiscouraged, the Nazis proceeded unofficially to enlist in this great peace offensive any neutral who happened to be in Berlin. Marshal Goering seems to have inspired most of the go-betweens. At various times he or some of his cohorts are said to have suggested the intermediation of the Dutch Colijn and the Swedish Dablerus. Visiting neutrals, anxious either to seem important or to be useful, offered their services without asking. And they were accepted so readily that about 12 months ago the air services in Europe were clogged with missionaries. Doubtless William Rhodes Davis, the messenger mentioned by Mr. Marshall, was one of them.

It is doubtful whether any of the travelers ever got to their final destination. Neville Chamberlain, it is said, actually gave out an office order that he was not at home to any visitor bearing olive branches. He had had some experiences of them at sundry conferences at Munich and Godesberg and Berchtesgaden, and, anyway, he was too busy. As for President Roosevelt, it is doubtful whether he even saw any of the messengers. He had himself that year directed five fruitless peace appeals to the Fuehrer, and, after all, what was the purpose of seeing a peace offer at secondhand after he had had the October 6 appeal direct? In the light of such an experience the peace offensive must have seemed to him, as it did to the British, to have what Shakespeare calls "an ancient and fishlike smell."

Such is news that what the foreign correspondents got tired of reporting at the time now turns out to be front page copy! The messengers doing the actual legwork never got such a hand, illustrated or otherwise.

Far Below The Need

The National Defense Commission's progress report is interesting chiefly because it shows how far the actual production of airplanes, ships and munitions lags behind the far-reaching policy enunciated by the President, that the United States should become a great arsenal for the democracies.

For the most part the commission's report covers the initial planning of our national defense and aid-to-Britain program. It summarizes the contracts that have been made and the orders that have been placed. As the commission itself points out, the task now "is to translate this national defense program from appropriations and blueprints into action." This new phase is by far the more difficult part of the undertaking. Fortunately, the President's enunciation of a more positive national policy will be followed shortly by the creation of an Office of Production Management which will have power to direct this gigantic arms-building project.

Failure of the airplane industry to attain an output of 1,000 planes a month as the new year begins is a formidable challenge to American industry. At one time the estimate of plane production at the beginning of 1941 was placed as high as 1,500 units. To be told now that only 700 planes are actually being turned out monthly to back up the pressing demands of several nations fighting for their existence as well as for our own defense is not reassuring.

This disappointing aspect of the program to date should not, however, be allowed to obscure the real progress that has been made. The Defense Commission reports that the production of aircraft for defense has doubled since June. Moreover, the mere number of airplanes turned out is not an accurate measure of progress in this industry. Training and pursuit planes can be built in a small fraction of the time required for a heavy bomber. Some of the heavier craft are now coming into production. Another encouraging factor is that many of the plants built in recent months will soon swell the capacity of this industry. And if it proves feasible to use automobile plants for the manufacture of aircraft, an enormous output can soon be attained.

American factories are turning out more than three times as many airplane engines as finished planes. This does not mean, however, that the production of motors is far ahead of the manufacture of wings, fuselages and other aircraft parts. Some combat planes require four engines and the average requirement is three.

When credit has been given for all the progress made to date, the fact remains that we are manufacturing weapons at a snail's pace in the light of our own needs and the international obligations which the United States has assumed. Probably the most heartening fact is that the imperative need for cooperation, for greater efforts and for sacrifice in the national interest is now apparent to everyone.

Wheeler's Peace

Senator Wheeler in his eight-point peace program begins with the assumption that "the German people want peace just as any people prefer peace to war." This is undoubtedly true. Indeed, it is as true of Hitler as it is of the Fuehrer's subjects. But the Senator begs the question when he argues that "the offer of a just, reasonable and generous peace will more quickly and effectively crumble Hitlerism and break the morale of the German people than all the bombers that could be dispatched over Berlin."

Such an offer might have the effect he says it would have. But what Senator Wheeler may believe is "just, reasonable and generous" may not be, and most likely is not, what the Germans would feel is "just, reasonable and generous," certainly not what Hitler would regard as such. And Hitler rules Germany today with an iron grip.

At this point it is worth examining Mr. Wheeler's precise proposals. As "a working basis for a just peace," his eight points have much to recommend them, though he is more than a little confused on the subject of historical geography. He does not appear to be aware, for instance, that before 1939 Czecho-Slovakia was never under German rule, and certainly was not in 1914, and that this was equally true of a large part of Poland. Nor does he even mention Austria, which did not belong to Germany in 1914. Yet his first point calls for "restoration of Germany's 1914 boundaries with an autonomous Poland and Czecho-Slovakia."

Mr. Wheeler also favors the restoration of independent France, Holland, Norway, Belgium and Denmark, and the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France. In return for this act of disgorging not only the gains of 1938 but also those of 1870, what would Senator Wheeler offer the Reich in return? In the first place, he would offer the Germans the return of the pre-war German colonies; secondly, the internationalization of the Suez Canal; thirdly, a stipulation that there must be no indemnities or reparations; fourthly, limitation of armaments and, lastly, "protection of all racial and religious minorities in all countries."

That Hitler would accept such a deal, which would necessarily involve the destruction of his regime, can be dismissed as wishful thinking of the most extreme sort. He could have had all that Mr. Wheeler is willing to offer Germany and a good deal more simply by carrying out the Munich settlement. He chose, instead, to go to war to extend Germany's domain, and he has carried the German people with him. Certainly there has been no evidence of any crumbling of the structure of power he has erected within the Reich. It is only defeat that can weaken his hold on Germany; and as long as the hope of victory remains, such peace terms as Senator Wheeler holds out could hardly have the slightest influence in that direction. Indeed, only a defeat of Germany could make certain the carrying out of such "just, reasonable and generous" terms, or anything like them.

This fact, being inconvenient, is ignored by Senator Wheeler. The expulsion of millions of Poles and Jews from western Poland, the expulsion of hundreds of thousands of Frenchmen from Lorraine, provide the true picture of what Hitler intends to do with the areas he has conquered. They are to be Germany's Lebensraum. That the Reich would give up these territories to secure a peace which Hitler deliberately smashed is to ignore the most obvious of realities.

CHORALE FOR A PEOPLE

Give beauty with the bread
Think no more enough
The food, the fire, the bed.
Send us a foreign stuff.
The food which we must eat
Is desperate and sweet.

Leave to the dog the bone;
Leave to the mole and snake
Their dark beds under the stone.
Leave to the reeds that shake,
Leave to the things that grow
Numb frost and the warm snow.

Give beauty to our need.
Give grace for house and rest.
Being not stalk nor weed
Oh Spirit, breathe in our breast.
We are not dog, snake, mole.
Feed with fuel our soul.

Better To Give . . .

Every one of us has been given at birth a book, which begins with, "Do not do unto others that which you do not want others to do unto you." Each New Year a page is turned and our grade depends on how we have filled this page. Lucky are the ones who have graduated to higher positions, and much more so, who have kept their senses and balance on the ladder of success. We all have been entrusted by the Lord with a job and those who fail to do it right lose the job.

Therefore it is important for us to remember this and to do our utmost to be worthy of the Lord's blessings and so be allowed to stay on the giving and not receiving side. That we are fortunate as to live under the protection of the Stars and Stripes is the greatest blessing the Lord gave us. Let's share our blessings with those who have been deprived of their liberties and help them restore peace and security in the world. Lawlessness is a contagious disease; it spreads like wildfire. Let's keep our land free of this disease by helping those who believe in our way of life to victory and we will continue for generations to come to have and celebrate happy, peaceful and prosperous new years.

I read your very fine editorial about the late George W. Offutt. I know of no citizen more loyal or who has accomplished more for our city. He was a great man and a fine father and a noble Christian gentleman.

Praise for Sermon

The courage and forthright sermon given by the Right Rev. Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen on the Catholic hour over the radio on Sunday afternoon was an inspiration to man. Had his sermon of Sunday been broadcast over all American networks and to all language-speaking peoples throughout the world, I sincerely believe, it would have done more good to the soul and spirit than have all the political speeches of the past. I wish there was some way that Father Sheen's sermon could be rebroadcast by electrical transcription to all America and to the world this New Year or afterward. I am not a Roman Catholic, but I do wish to commend Father Sheen for the very inspiring sermon he gave, and I hope he will be allowed to give it again at some time in the near future. The world and its rulers need such a dose of inspiring religion. As Father Sheen truthfully said, "God has not abandoned the world; the world has abandoned Him." It is time for a world reawakening to the principles laid down by that omnipotent constitution: the Sermon on the Mount.

U. S. A Republic

When the American press finally loses its freedom, it may then begin to wonder why it happened and blame everybody but its own dear self.

What in the world is the matter with the word "republican," anyhow? It's in the dictionaries, is an honest and legitimate part of our language! It's in the Constitution of the United States and "democratic" is not)! Then, what's the matter with it? What's wrong with it? Even the Republicans themselves shun the use of it, when they can find the slightest particle of an excuse to use "democratic," "democracy," etc.

What form of federal government do we have in this country?

Is it, in fact, a democracy?

Or is it, in fact, a republic?

It is a republic—it is republican—or, anyway, supposed to be!

Does the word "democracy," or the word "democratic" appear (yet) in the Constitution of the United States of America? Does either of them appear in that great document under which at least several of the 131,000,000 people of the United States are trying to do business? Try to find them therein! If they're there, I've missed them.

The word "republican" does appear in the Constitution of the United States. Section 4 of Article 4, of the Constitution, says the following: "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this union a republican form of government."

It says nothing at all about a "democratic" form of government.

If the term "democratic" and "republican" were not regarded as exactly synonymous by the writers of the document and by the other great men who gave us the chance to have such a thing as a government of the United States of America, then why does the Republican Party, which is making such an emphatic argument on the idea that it is "the constitutional party," not use the constitutional term "republican" more and more and "democratic" less and less, in its political documents, news columns, editorial columns, and speeches?

If the Republican Party itself consistently and always shuns all use of the term "republican" with reference to our form of government and itself, can it blame the majority of the people of the United States for having arrived (on November 5) at the conclusion that all things "republican" are bankrupt, dead and gone—and that if our form of government is "democratic" the Democrats must have invented it, and having invented it, then they surely, being the geniuses of its origin and its existence, must logically be the boys and girls who ought to be voted for for the purpose of operating and running it.

They have a democratic form of government in Iceland, I hear, but we don't have one—and never have had one.

Did you ever hear anybody singing a song entitled "The Battle Hymn of the Democracy" or join "The Grand Old Army of the Democracy"? I never did!

Islands For Debts

I think your paper should take the view that a great many of my friends have—that the West Indies and Bermuda should be turned over to the United States on the war debt.

Then we could afford to give Great Britain the credit she is asking for. I know that she is fighting our war, but I do believe we ought to have a square deal. In a deal of this kind Great Britain would be showing good faith.

I am with the President and believe we should do everything possible in the world to aid her, short of sending our men abroad.

A. H. BUELL.

Freedom And Responsibility

I am very grateful to you for publishing the letter of Eric Underwood. In order that we may cooperate happily and intelligently it is important that we understand the English problems and that they understand ours.

I was fortunate in having an interesting teacher of government and took a particular interest in the differences between the English government and ours. I was astonished to find that the House of Lords had practically no power comparable with our own Senate. The House of Commons holds the purse strings and the House of Lords does not dare put the slightest check on appropriations. Unlike our President, the prime minister has no set tenure of office and can be, as we would call it, "recalled" at any time by a vote which clearly indicates a lack of confidence in him by the House of Commons. In case a prime minister fails to obtain a vote of confidence it is possible to have a special election which may "recall" a great proportion of the House of Commons without waiting for any terms of office to expire.

Thus it can be seen in many ways the machinery of democratic England is much more flexible and sensitive to public opinion than our own machinery of government, and that it can respond quickly to changes in popular sentiment.

The all-important fact is that the complexion of the body politic of this country or England is simply the composite result of the characteristics and opinions of the great majority of citizens. It is a wonderful thing to have liberty of individual action, but it means nothing unless the individual is willing to take personal responsibility and honestly try to find out what's best for all and cooperate unselfishly to accomplish results. If we as citizens do not have something in our make-up that makes us want to "give" and not always "get," this country sooner or later will have to have a human dictator to make us cooperate for our own protection. You have doubtless heard it said that "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." A national crisis after all is a collective crisis for all the individuals in a country. It leads either to the assumption of greater responsibility on the part of individuals or to an evasion of responsibility and to dictatorship. Put bluntly either the people rule (that includes you and me) or we abdicate, let someone else do it and the first thing we know we, too, have a dictatorship. We must somewhere have within us a spark of the spiritual—I will not call it religion—which will enable "A Government of the people, by the people, for the people" to operate smoothly and efficiently in order to compete with an efficient dictatorship.

Finland and England so far have carried through not because of their material resources, but because of their good old-fashioned spiritual "guts" and it seems to me no other word expresses just what this short, ugly one does. I pray that I may have this same quality which will enable me to cooperate with my fellow citizens and the other countries having as the basis of their government, freedom and responsibility of the individual. This is true self-government. I have the utmost confidence in the American individual once he begins to think and really accept responsibility. It does not matter whether he sits in Congress or works at a lathe, at a desk or on the farm. He has the spirit of liberty within him and neither gunmen nor dictators can permanently conquer the spirit of the individuals in this country, and I may say in Finland, England, China or the other nations that temporarily have been submerged by supermechanization which perhaps for the time being has outstripped the spiritual forces in the world.

Let us stop talking about "liberty" and "individual rights" and think and do more about our duties and responsibilities. France has found that the alternative is defeat and slavery.

The Post Impressionist

Washington Party

WE WENT to the party because Jack said it was one of the sights of Washington.

"You New Yorkers come down here and break your necks to get into an embassy," he observed, "but you never notice the little people who make the wheels of government go 'round. Come along with me and see how the average Washingtonian spends his Saturday evenings."

According to Jack, the average Washingtonian is a Government clerk who gets less than $3,000 a year. He assures me that these people live intense and interesting lives, and he should know as he is one of them. He wanted me to meet his co-workers at a "get-together" they were having.

The affair began at 9 o'clock. It was held in a house that had once been a mansion, on a street that had once been fashionable. Today the mansion is flanked by a drug store and a boarding house and the street is quiet and empty.

As we drove up, there was hardly a crack of light showing through the doors and windows, but inside some 75 gay young people were milling around, laughing, talking and dancing.

A capable-looking young man rushed up to us and took our tickets, which had cost $1 for the pair.

"You can park your wraps in there," he told us, pointing to an overcrowded dressing room at the right of the entrance.

"There's cider in the next room," the ticket taker advised us after we had disposed of our wraps, "and the taproom is at the rear."

We took a look around. The men were all in business clothes and the girls wore short, serviceable dresses brightened with bits of costume jewelry. Some of them were pretty and some were plain, but they all seemed to be having a good time.

In what had once been a drawing room, happy couples were whirling around decorously to the music of a Victrola. The room was festooned with strings of colored balloons which contrasted sharply with the black walnut woodwork and the stately old-fashioned chandeliers.

There was more light and more animation in the taproom than in the cider room. Men and girls were standing around, smoking, drinking beer and cracking jokes. Jack appeared to know them all and introduced me right and left. They said they were "pleased to meet me," but most of them drifted away after a little desultory conversation.

When I had finished a glass of beer, I asked one of the girls to dance and we joined the throng in the drawing room.

She was a Mrs. Harris and she told me that her husband worked in the Loan Administration. Her work, she said, was analyzing personnel and she tried to tell me how she did it. I must confess that I followed her more easily when she began to tell me about her home in Falls Church. She and her husband have a small house there, and a big yard, and they raise vegetables.

To reach Washington by 9 each morning, they get up at 7. In summer they rise a little earlier because they like to work in the garden before tackling the main business of the day. In the evening, she told me, they do the housework together and then listen to the radio or read.

My next partner was a Southern girl, Miss Loveless ("call me Amy"), who told me that her father was kin to a Congressman.

"I'm in the pool," she confided, "but I hope to get a secretary job. I took shorthand at night school last year, but it was pretty tiresome. It's more fun this year when I don't have to study."

Jack brought up a Miss Huston, whom he introduced as a "whiz at statistics." She was a subdued-looking little person in a plain black dress with an old-fashioned coiffure. She danced as I have always subconsciously expected statisticians to dance, with a sort of dazed indifference, and had little to say for herself. She told me that she didn't know many people and spent most of her evenings reading detective stories.

Both she and her mother have Government jobs, but they'd like to go back to Kansas City. She said she hoped the Defense Commission would set up a branch in Kansas City.

"Mamma and I would both apply at once," she assured me, seriously.

I talked for a few minutes with the head of the section, but he was in great demand, and before we could have any real conversation three young people came for him and the lights in the drawing room were turned up full blast.

"What happens now?" I asked.

"Stunts," said Jack.

"Stunts at a dance?"

"In Washington," he explained, "you can't have a party without stunts."

We all sat around the edges of the room and a loquacious and witty master of ceremonies took the floor. He announced that two teams would act out titles of popular songs, and that prizes would be awarded to those guessing the charades.

Jack guessed the first one and his prize was a rubber bowie knife. Some one else won a false nose and a mustache, and the other prizes carried out the same general idea.

The grand climax of the evening was a quiz program, in which the head men of the section were called on to answer some trick questions that involved considerable ragging about the daily office work.

Their answers were enthusiastically applauded. After that the program was declared at an end and dancing was resumed. The taproom reopened and the last vestiges of the popcorn and cider disappeared.

Jack and I got our coats and started for home.

"How did you like it?" he asked me.

"It was a swell party, and I'm glad I went. More enthusiasm and spontaneity than an embassy party, but probably not so much publicity."

Jack's boyish laughter rang out on the evening air.

"Publicity? That's good. When a bunch of people like that get together, it isn't news," he assured me. "There are probably a dozen of them every Saturday night in this man's town.

Die-Hard Isolationists

By Ernest K. Lindley

Mired In The Past

THE GULF between the President and the isolationist argument presented Monday night by Senator Wheeler should not be unbridgeable.

Both men are real Democrats. Both hate Hitler and all that he stands for. Both are sympathetic with the British. I see no reason to question Wheeler's assertion that his "sympathy for the British is both deep and genuine—and is exceeded only by the depth and sincerity of my Americanism."

Both men realize that we have still to solve economic and social problems at home. The President made it plain that he intends to defend the social gains made in the last few years.

"I would ask no one to defend a democracy which in turn would not defend every one in the Nation against want and privation," the President said. "The strength of this Nation shall not be diluted by the failure of the Government to protect the economic well-being of its citizens."

WHEELER SAYS we ought to "settle our own problems before we undertake to settle the problems of Asia, Africa, Australasia, South America and Europe."

Similar thoughts were prevalent in France and Great Britain while Germany was building the most powerful army and air force in the world. Partly as a result, the French have lost the right and power to settle any of their own problems, and the British are fighting for their very lives.

National security—the right to settle our own problems—must come first.

Wheeler, of course, imputes to Roosevelt an ambition or national policy which cannot be found in his utterances. The President has not proposed that we "settle the problems" of all other continents. Our vital interest, as he clearly set forth in his fireside chat, is "in the control of the oceans which lead to this hemisphere."

If the President thought we should "settle the problems" of all the other continents he would advocate sending huge expeditionary forces to Asia, Europe and perhaps Africa. Instead, he again solemnly affirmed that no member of the Government has any intention of sending such a force.

ROOSEVELT IS thinking in terms of aviation and naval power. The difference between control of the oceans and control of the interior of the transoceanic continents is clear.

South America stands apart because it could be used as a base for direct attack on the Panama Canal, and on us. The west coast of Africa is important as a jumping-off place to South America. Australasia is important because, if the Japanese conquered it they would have the materials to build an empire powerful enough to stand as a constant threat to our security.

Wheeler asserts that "our independence can only be lost or compromised if Germany invades the Western Hemisphere north of the Equator." He said this could be done only if the Germans could send at least 2,000,000 men, with planes, tanks and other equipment, in a single convoy across the Atlantic.

A few thousand men took Norway—and most Latin-American nations are not much better prepared to defend themselves.

THE IDEA that the Western Hemisphere might be attacked from two sides simultaneously seems beyond Wheeler's grasp. This is what haunts Roosevelt's mind. As he said, he is thinking not only of today but of our children and our grandchildren.

We might beat off such an attack by a combination of great powers controlling all the resources of Europe, Asia, Africa and Australasia. But it would be a terrific war, even with the weapons we know today and making no allowance for the further development of aviation.

Both Roosevelt and Wheeler want to avoid war. But Wheeler is more concerned about avoiding the present one, which the President thinks can be won by our aid, than a future war which we might have to fight alone. The President believes that if this one can be won, we will escape a later and more dangerous and more costly war.

Wheeler recalls the senior Bob La Follette's stand against war in 1917. He recalls the British propaganda we were subjected to in World War No. 1.

THROUGHOUT, Wheeler reveals that he is still thinking of the last war, not of the present war, nor of the future war that is probable, or at least possible, if the Axis defeats the British.

This may be the real seat of Wheeler's trouble—that he is mired in the past, like the smug French and British generals and politicians who were still thinking of the last war while the Germans were preparing for this one.

La Follette may have been right in 1917. But that doesn't mean that Wheeler is not abysmally wrong now. The development of the airplane alone makes a difference. If Wheeler would stop living in the past long enough to acquaint himself with present-day military and naval facts—and appraise them with courage and imagination—he would stop making speeches that reek with the smugness of the die-hard conservatism he used to fight on the domestic front.

On The Record

Truth For The New Year

WHEN SOMEONE knows that he is very ill and goes to a physician for diagnosis he watches the doctor's face avidly. And how quickly he detects the evasive answer, the air of false and hearty cheerfulness, the inclusiveness of the soothing tone, "Perhaps a little operation. Now don't you worry."

"Yes, but what is it?"

"Now, of course, we shall have to explore a little."

"So that's what it is!"

"Now, now, what put that idea into your head? You just trust me."

But one doesn't. One leaves with a new sickness, a terrible sickness in the mind. It is the sick fear of the unknown. The haunting fear of the false hope. Far better the grave, calm, professional ultimatum: "It's this and it's that. It's very serious. You've got a chance."

THEN ONE KNOWS: I shall live or I shall die. I shall need all my powers. I intend to use them to live.

The knowledge of truth is the basis for decision, and the decision is the basis of life, hope and courage.

I found the President's speech an intense relief. For what he said was God's simple truth. It was cleanly bitter truth: We are in grave danger. It will never be earlier. Sedatives won't cure us. It isn't our nerves, and it isn't lack of sleep. There are diseased cells in the organism of the world, cells that are spreading with dreadful speed. Our lives are at stake, but our organism as a whole is robust and young and healthy. We've a good chance, a swell chance, if we make up our minds to take it and take it now.

The fear of the known is never demoralizing. It is the cherishing of illusions that disintegrates us.

IN THE GIGANTIC conspiracy to overthrow the civilization of the world the part played by the assault on human psychology is primary. Goebbels was at one time convinced that the Nazis could subjugate the world without firing a shot—simply by breaking down mental resistance. The technique used has nothing to do with reasonable argument. It does not derive from the forum or the senate or the editorial room.

It consists of a most acute analysis of human emotions, particularly of the emotion of fear, and of human illusions and human weaknesses, of the good instincts as well as the bad instincts, and the scientific exploitation of all of them.

Thus, the desire for peace is exploited to become an apologia for total war. At the same time, the aggressive instinct is released in all countries against weaker neighbors, and the fear instinct stimulated in the weaker and directed against stronger neighbors. Thus, in our own country, we are asked to regard the anomaly of Canada, an unfortified neighbor whose presence in the British Commonwealth might drag us into war, and our attention is directed toward the rich booty of Mexico; while in South America, each country is stimulated to fear of the northern Titan.

WE ARE systematically reminded of 1776 and 1812, in order to direct our attention away from 1940. We are reminded to avoid entangling alliances, and offered one at the same time—"with the victorious power, the dominant nation of Europe."

It is the ultimate triumph of the Nazi attempt to induce nervous and mental breakdown when the democracies can be made to think of their own members as "warmongers," of traitors and spies as "peace agents," and of moronic babblers as wise men. It is the ultimate triumph when the humanitarian instinct can be mobilized to collaborate for the extinction of humanitarianism, which is the essence of Nazi philosophy. Nor do the Nazis have the slightest hesitation in admitting this openly, in a body of writings which fills libraries, and in the most candid speeches, while at the same time they click their tongues against their teeth in horror at all the suffering that warmongering democrats are imposing upon the human race.

For they speculate that those in whom hate and envy and frustration are strong will be naturally attracted to them, and those in whom love rules can be seduced by them. So in all countries you find the gentle locking arms with the gangsters in a common program to let nature take its course—nature being the tooth and the claw supplemented by the airplane, the tank and the machine gun.

THIS COLUMN has said many times, and will insist many times more—until it no longer needs to be said—that the failure to understand the nature of Nazism has been the undoing of the world.

This colossal imaginative failure comes out in such a report as that of Sir Nevile Henderson, who, having lived among the Nazis, shows clearly that he never had the remotest idea of what they were about.

Ask Mr. Tolischus, for 20 years the chief of the New York Times bureau in Berlin, what they are about; ask Edgar Mowrer, for 20 years correspondent in Rome, Berlin, and Paris for the Chicago Daily News; ask Mr. Leland Stowe, for many years representative of the Herald Tribune in Europe; ask Mr. Fodor, Mr. Gunther, or any others of that band of scholarly students and intrepid reporters what the Nazis are about. These men know. They know because they have made an effort to know. They know because they have read libraries of philosophy and history and contemporary writings in the intention to penetrate into the mind of modern Germany.

They tell us the truth, namely, that there is no point of agreement between the mind that regards reason, realism, human welfare, peace, law, cooperation, ethic, as the aim of a social order, and a mind that regards the instinctual: force, aggression, ruthlessness, cruelty, uninhibited sexuality, lust and conquest, as the releasing, liberating forces of mankind. They tell us that there is no agreement between us, as we still are, and them, for they have turned these instincts loose in the greatest counter-revolution in human history, and are destroying their victims by their own virtues: destroying free speech by civil liberties; peace by pacifism; law by legalism; humanity by humanitarianism, and carrying their war into every human mind.

THEY LAUNCH a peace offensive before every major new aggression, and there is always someone, like Senator Wheeler, or like Mr. Verne Marshall, who swallows the bait.

It is with no malice whatever toward Senator Wheeler that I say that his speech and his outline of a possible peace are utter nonsense. If such a peace were possible, London would not be in flames and Nazi agents spreading mental disintegration in every country on the globe. Whole peoples would not be moaning in crucifixion if such a peace were possible. What Senator Wheeler asks us to think is that this war, prepared for by the building of a complete philosophy of force plus the most gigantic war machine in human history, happened because of a little misunderstanding, and that it is possible for the Nazis to say, "Sorry, fellow, my mistake."

And Mr. Verne Marshall (who is he, anyhow?) begins living in the realm of fantasy much more unreal than Hollywood war films when he "reveals" that an "official" offer of peace was made to the President of the United States by Goering via an American oil speculator. The story is front-page news in papers devoted to reason. Is not the story itself evidence of the insane asylum that this world is becoming? Is there not a German Embassy in Washington through which "official" peace overtures can be made? And does not Mr. Marshall know that Goering, since long before this war, has used addle-pated businessmen, bent on consummating deals, as his "peace" emissaries, to quiet the victim and confuse the victim's mind while he gets ready to destroy him?

They went to Austria, to Poland, to Czecho-Slovakia, to Holland, to Belgium, to France, to London. But in the days when the "official" peace offer was to be "officially" discussed—in those days tanks began rolling and airplanes spattering fire and destruction.

Mr. Davis, like many others, was being taken for a ride.

Yes, the President has given us a New Year's gift; a great New Year's gift: the gift of the truth, of the clean, aseptic surgery of the truth. Let us live in the truth and act in its light, knowing that only the truth will make us and keep us free.

Fair Enough

A Showdown Ahead

PRESIDENT Roosevelt's speech recognizing the enemies of the United States might have been made with equal truth a year ago, but the election delayed things, and, anyway, it is good to have it in the record, now. Now the Nazis and the Japanese understand us, but, more important, the people of this country know where they stand. From the very beginning there has never been an hour when there was any doubt as to the right or wrong of the conflict or the guilt of the criminal nation. The Nazis under Hitler have repeatedly proclaimed themselves the chosen people, with a mission to conquer the world and reduce their racial inferiors everywhere to the status of slaves, and their press, in an unguarded moment of wrath, once threatened to take an interest in the internal affairs of this country which would not be pleasant to Americans.

They are now well advanced on their mission of world domination, and their interest in American affairs has been felt in many ways, particularly through the anti-American bund, which has had the effrontery to hold military exercises in this country after the fashion which was so successful in Austria and Czecho-Slovakia. This bund, of course, is an agency of the Nazi government and an informal army of invasion.

"THIS IS NOT a fireside chat on war; it is a talk on national security," the President said, but within a few minutes he had taken from Adolf Hitler's own speech, delivered only three weeks ago, the words in which the Fuehrer rejected any possibility of peaceful relations between the American philosophy of government and Nazism. So, although Mr. Roosevelt sugar-coated the British issue of war with a more palatable phrase, the fact remains that he recognized the inevitability of a showdown between the United States and Germany should Britain lose in Europe.

Those who attempt to deny or obscure this truth offer nothing but a blurry hope that a victorious Axis would then be content with its gains and would discover, after all, some means by which Hitler could be induced to live in peace with that world with which he lately said Germany never could be reconciled.

Charles Lindbergh, in his strongest effort to delude the country from which he willingly exiled himself, dealt only with material things and did not list in the inventory of the heritage which he would like to hand on to his children any of the qualities which distinguish the United States from Germany. This is all right for him. He is a cold fish, anyway.

SENATOR Burt Wheeler has merely insisted that the United States has no quarrel with Hitler, when it is plain that Hitler makes the quarrel. Neither of these, nor any other prominent opponent of aid for the British, has offered the slightest basis for security or peace should Britain fall, except, of course, acceptance of Hitler's way, which would revoke everything that Americanism is.

Meanwhile what do these men and others like them think the Nazis would be doing in the United States—the Nazis who sent hordes of civilian "tourists" into Rumania and Norway who suddenly put on brassards and were soldiers? How many such German guests would be needed to seize the armories, power plants and broadcasting stations in the key cities of a trusting, untrained, ill-armed and generally flabby United States? And which course is wiser—to fight a war later on two sides alone against a triumphal Axis or, by a strong, national effort now, provide that help which may enable the British and Greece and, perhaps, a revived France to beat Hitler in this one?

THIS IS the first time that the whole United States has examined the German actions in this war and frankly looked at the declared belief of the Germans that they are actually the chosen people, with a mission to rule their inferiors, including that mongrel breed, the Americans. Hitherto all expressions, though sometimes sharp, have been couched in general terms, and a pretense at least of international amenity has been maintained.

Nothing that the President said has impaired good relations with any friendly power, for the powers of the Axis have been anti-American since long before the war and the official press of Italy has been openly baiting the American Nation and its people for four years as the official policy of the Duce.

The speech dispels all doubt. Germany, Italy and Japan have combined against the United States for action following the defeat of Britain, as everyone knew before but public opinion couldn't quite realize, and this Nation will now go unreservedly into the armament industry to help Britain beat Hitler.

Roosevelt—Man Of The Year

THERE CAN BE no doubt about it. The American man of the year just ended is Franklin Delano Roosevelt, newly elected President of the United States for a third term and now charged with piloting this Nation through the most dangerous days it has known since the Civil War.

At this moment, when so infinitely much depends upon him, it is important to note that he faces his heavy duties with greater reserves of energy, both physical and intellectual, than he has possessed for some time past. Often in these last months he has seemed a tired man, unwilling to shoulder the overwhelming responsibilities of his office. Now, however, although his friends and enemies may disagree bitterly about his abilities, no one need doubt he has the necessary force at his command.

HE HAS GONE through an exceedingly difficult period, which began, according to those close to him, with the fall of France. France's fall, so sudden and so complete, disappointed the hopes on which his policy had been founded. The surprise and shock seem to have exhausted him mentally. And the tiredness of his mind expressed itself in many ways—his early slowness with the emergency defense program, his temporary willingness to make concessions to the isolationists, even his strange joking with the British and French Ambassadors, when Lord Lothian and Count de Saint-Quentin came to make a last appeal for aid for the French.

After his renomination he shook off his mental exhaustion, but the effort of managing the campaign and the Nation's affairs induced a physical exhaustion even more serious in its results. By election day, his last reserves were used up. In the ensuing month many men who work with him were gravely disturbed by the complete absence of his accustomed vitality and by his preference for deferring difficult decisions. He himself must have known something was wrong, for he began taking long afternoon rests for the first time in his life as President. It was because he knew something was wrong that he insisted on making a real vacation of his cruise aboard the Tuscaloosa. And it was the vacation cruise which restored him as though by magic. He is now his old self, quick, venturesome and bold as ever.

AS ALL who heard him Sunday night must know, he is also in a fighting mood. His fighting moods in the past have seldom been his best, for he has a habit of mingling personal with political animosities. But this particular fighting mood is more like the mood of 1933, when he found a country that seemed to be crumbling into ruin and cheerfully took help from any quarter to shore up the supports. He is graver than he was in those days, less inclined to shock casual visitors with midcrisis talk of trivial, comfortable things, and far less reliant on his politician's airs and graces. In his private talk, as in his Sunday night speech, he is content to state facts plainly and forcibly, without those little dramatic underlings and verbal ornamentations for which he used to have a weakness.

The substance of his fighting mood is simple. As one of his closest associates put it: "He thinks the future of the United States as a Nation, of the freedoms and decencies that make this Nation what it is, and probably of what we call civilization in the world depend on the people of the United States facing the facts of their situation. He is determined that the people shall face the facts without the wishful thinking that is the terrible disease of all democracies. And he is determined that after the facts are faced they shall be dealt with courageously and firmly." His fight, therefore, right or wrong, will be against all those who say: "Things are not so bad as they seem. Germany is no danger. And even if you think Hitler dangerous, let us be practical about this matter. Let us realize there is little we can do, and wash our hands of it."

IT IS A HARD thing for him that in his eighth year, in the most demanding office in the world, he should simultaneously face the most important fight, and the most complex administrative task of his career. He seems to understand the need to conserve himself, for he has recently delegated to members of his Cabinet and his personal staff every responsibility which is not directly connected with foreign policy or the defense program. These two great problems are his only preoccupations. He starts work on them at his morning hour after breakfast in bed, spends all day conferring about them, generally invites someone interested in them to join him in his afternoon swim, and reads reports on them until it is time to go to bed again.

Work is almost his whole life. Crowds of people pass through the White House, but they are work for him, as anyone can tell who watches him grimly gathering his forces to say good-bye to the crowd after a State dinner. He has his friends, some of them intimate, but they are chiefly members of his staff, personages of the Administration, or private advisers like Harry Hopkins. Indeed, the only companion who never talks shop with him is his scottie, Falla, named after a rather disreputable Delano ancestor, whom he keeps at his side all day and every day.

Unfrightened America

By Barnet Nover

Program For The New Year

NO SPEECH made by any American statesman since the voice of Woodrow Wilson was stilled has aroused such intense and widespread interest as that delivered over the radio by President Roosevelt last Sunday night. In a very literal sense he had the world for his audience.

This circumstance was, in part, a deserved tribute to a man who has been one of the most eloquent and uncompromising spokesmen of democracy in a world swept by a tide of totalitarianism. But it was even more a tribute to the Nation whose deepest sentiments he was voicing with such logic, vigor and forthrightness as to give it a certain place among the greatest of American state papers.

THERE ARE AMERICANS, fortunately a decreasing number, who, blinded by the successes achieved by the dictators, superficial and temporary as these successes may prove to be, tend to view our position and our actual and potential influence in the world through very dark glasses.

There is nothing which this Nation can do, they tell us, which can in any measurable degree affect the present balance of forces or alter the trend of events. Why resist the irresistible, they ask? Why not ride the "wave of the future?" Why oppose Europe's new rulers? Why not come to terms with them while there is still time?

There are others who argue that whatever happens in Europe or Asia does not concern us. We can ignore those developments as unpleasant to behold and unfortunate for those nearer the scene of destruction, but, after all, we can remain aloof and unscathed, trusting to the broad Atlantic and the broader Pacific to keep war from our shores. These individuals, to use the President's graphic phrase, would crawl into bed and pull the blanket over them.

There are still others who, despite the experience of the Dutch, the Norwegians, the Belgians, the French and many other peoples, continue to believe that peace can be had by wishing for it hard enough, while doing nothing with equal vigor.

TO THESE appeasers, defeatists and wishful thinkers the President gave effective answer Sunday night and his words have echoed across the globe. For this speech provided a clue to America's future conduct and was therefore of tremendous importance to every other nation and people in the world.

The dictators are fully aware of the fact that the United States is the greatest agglomeration of economic power the world has ever seen. The nations fighting the Axis are equally aware of this all-important fact. So, too, are the captive peoples and the quivering neutrals who live in constant terror on the periphery of the conflict. All of them realize that if this power which the United States commands is speedily and effectively exerted, it will have a decisive bearing on events.

IT HAS BEEN Hitler's calculation, and the calculations of Mussolini and the Japanese as well, that the people and Government of the United States would refuse to throw this Nation's weight into the scales, or, if they finally decided to do so, that this decision would be reached and acted upon too late to make any difference in the struggles raging in Europe, Africa and Asia. The Axis and Japan have expected to win before America became aroused to the situation. For that reason they could ignore American pleas, protests, exhortations, admonitions, objections. Even when after the French debacle of last June, the American giant began to bestir himself, Hitler, Mussolini and the Japanese did little about it. They were certain they could take care of the United States in their own good time.

Despite the relative absence of official comment by Germany, Italy and Japan, his remarks are not being discounted in those countries. They cannot help but realize that the President's inspiring words and, even more, the program of action which he has laid down will encourage all the millions now living in a state of captivity. They know that no censorship can possibly succeed in keeping from those peoples the substance and significance of that statement and in becoming for them a beacon of hope lighting the way to their ultimate deliverance. And they realize also that if that program is speedily and effectively implemented it would mean their doom.

But words are not enough. The President's program must not only be carried out, but carried out with every ounce of energy the American people possess. Hesitation means disaster. For the dictators are now more clearly on notice than ever before that if they are to win, they must win quickly before the American Leviathan begins to move at full speed. The race is on. Its outcome will determine the destinies of the world for ages to come.

A Message to Norway

Dr. Mann Warns Against Confusion

Dr. Thomas Mann, the great German writer now living in exile in the United States, has sent the following message to the people of Norway via the short-wave Station WRUL in Boston, Mass. This is a part of the message.

My listeners in Norway:

OF COURAGE, of trust in a more decent future, you have no need. And yet it is a deep satisfaction to me that I may speak to you today. A German author in these days has many a sad thought to endure because the people to whom he is bound by language and good traditions have caused the world so much unhappiness. It is my consolation that I and my kind fought against the evil with the powers given us, and we gave warning, when the time was right.

You on your side are today cut off from the world with which you were bound by your commerce, your humane culture, your exemplary self-government.

Your newspapers can only write what the Germans allow: That is, not much. Your great writers are silent—except one—a man to whom we are indebted for glorious works, whom I admired very much, and who now was so confused in the evil caprice of his age that he openly embraced the party of the foreign conqueror.

It is a greater misfortune for him than for us. You, then, thus cut off, insufficiently informed, and besides pursued daily by the cunning propaganda of Hitler's people, you will be glad to hear voices, from America, from the great, distant, free country, where we follow your fate attentively and where you have many friends.

NORWAY has many friends, so has Holland and Belgium—Prague and Greece, too. These little nations were really the salt of the earth. Their citizens lived happily and undisturbed by the busy turmoil of great power politics; they could devote themselves to the things of peace, to work, to social justice, to thought and art.

In all of these fields Norway has done much. Only to speak of that which is closest to me as a writer: What would the modern art of the theater be without Henrich Ibsen?

Another great Norwegian, whom I, like all the world admired—was Bjornstjerne Bjornson.

THE NATION which has produced such culture and such men has the right to independence. I mean: She has the right to shape her future in keeping with her past, her character and her free will. That does not mean that she would have to shut herself off from the world, to presume upon the prerogatives of a rigid sovereignty and neutrality. On the contrary. We all know that solutions of the future will have a different aspect from the solutions of the past.

The nations will enter into alliances from which they formerly shied away. It is their fault—yes, let us say it frankly—it is the fault of the nations, large and small, that are today dominated by Germany, that they did not make these alliances in time. Had they been made in time, the German rulers would not have had the opportunity to commit their crimes or to set up their bloody "pseudo-order" in place of the genuine one that is necessary.

IT IS A "pseudo-order" which begins with an attack by night and fog upon a peaceful neighboring country, sinks its ships without warning and aims to take quickly and by surprise its monarch captive.

As long as the world has existed such an order has never endured. Order is freedom and right; the free consent and right of each of its members. For such an order, you, in your way, are fighting too, since you do not allow yourselves to be confused by the mean facts of the moment, but you strive calmly and securely to remain what you are. It is America's wish and my personal heartfelt wish that in this struggle you may persist victoriously.

Keeping of Budget in Order Best Resolve for Housewife

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

TURNING over a new leaf for New Year's? Resolving that there'll be no more financial crises caused by slack reins? That's fine, only be sure that the new leaf is the right page and chapter for your circumstances. Otherwise it's likely to get you into a worse financial jam than before. This is the main reason why one hard and fast percentage budget won't work for everybody—why a good working budget must be tailored to fit each individual situation. The few rules we believe in, on the budget question, offer plenty of leeway in spending the family fortune.

Don't fool yourself by juggling figures to look like what they're not. Don't rob Peter to pay Paul. Don't try to cover up at family financial conferences and don't base plans on cutting down on fixed costs that can't be chiseled on enough to count. Don't try to forget time-payments until they're staring you in the face accusingly; they must be considered in apportioning the weekly costs of living.

Now for a few "do's." Have a sinking fund or a "kitty" to take care of back sliding—this is an anchor to windward to keep the budget in operating order whether the crisis is an unexpected legitimate expense, an honest mistake or an off-the-deep-end splurge. If you can't trust yourself on a monthly basis when you get your money weekly, use the envelope system and religiously put the right amount in each envelope each week, considering it the same as paid out—and never, cross-your-heart, borrow from it.

Keep an office as conscientiously as you keep house—in a pleasant corner with a desk. File bills and receipts carefully; balance your bank book and have a spike for day-by-day grocery slips, or better still a day book for grocery lists. Here also you ought to keep lots of sharp pencils and crisp clean paper to figure on—it makes as big a difference in the enthusiasm with which you can tackle your 'rithmetic as a new tablet used to do in the dear old golden rule days.

Considering the volume of business carried on by a lady with a house, it's amazing how rarely an otherwise well-ordered household has a sharpened pencil at hand or any of the simplest most essential of desk supplies, like clips, rubber bands, a pencil sharpener, a working desk calendar. If you're guilty of these lapses, take a trip to the five and ten and stock up—then make a New ear's resolution to keep your desk in working order.

Suit Ensemble Is Popular For D. C. Wear

Key West, Fla., Fashions Featured At Style Show

By Jane Driscoll
The Post Fashion Editor.

The ever changing scene in Washington presents a difficult clothes problem not only to women wedded to the Army or Navy, but to others here on a temporary basis. It is a problem of selecting clothes that are not only suitable here, but also in other regions.

While Key West and Florida fashions were featured at a local department store show yesterday, many of the outfits shown were practical for the women "here today and gone tomorrow." The show, sponsored by Tau Omicron Phi, the Army and Navy Sorority, was given for the benefit of Army and Navy relief societies with members of the sorority serving as models.

Answers the Problem

Coats and suit ensembles were the answer to the question of what to wear in this city or a thousand miles away. Made chiefly of light weight wools and flannel in pastel shades, they would suit the need in any clime. Dolman sleeves and the new soft shoulders were the outstanding feature of these coats. Sport coats had just enough flare at the back to retain a smooth shoulder line and casual fit—the kind of a coat that slips on easily over the shoulders and stays there without being put on entirely. This casual wearing of coats is an easy transition to get one in the mood for capes—a style that is on its way up.

Suits were plainly tailored with patch pockets on the new longer wrist length jackets or fitted jackets with colored saddle stitching. Suits, too, carry the new soft shoulders that are slightly raised and rounded. Knife pleats were the feature of suit skirts—being more in keeping with the longer waistline appearance of the silhouette than flared skirts.

Tan, bamboo, and natural shades were wearable colors shown for modified sport dresses. Tucked bosoms, slightly flared skirts and banded button fronts were the predominating style favorites. Inconspicuous colors and styles of these dresses made them easily adaptable to a variety of climates.

Unusual Trimmings

Unusual trimming on dresses was indicative of style trends. Clever initiative was shown by decorating light colored dresses with some bit of Western, Hawaiian or South American motif to give dash to the costume.

Saddle tan leather studded with gold nail heads made a striking wrist bandbracelet, accompanied by a crescent shaped necklace. Added to a plain dress the Western theme in many guises makes a clever outfit.

Hawaiian motifs took shape in leis of real flowers or bright tropical prints for dresses and beachwear. For going native in true Hawaiian fashion a water resistant grass skirt atop grass shorts with bra-top and a lei of real carnations was modeled.

Especially noted were the bright earthen Mexican, Hawaiian and South American colors in costumes. These colors appeared mostly in play suits, beach costumes, sports dresses and ensembles of capes and coats.

Kidney Dishes

Beef and hog kidneys usually are used for stews and kidney pies. They are stronger in flavor than lamb and veal kidneys, so should be soaked half an hour in salted cold water. Put a teaspoon of salt in each 3 cups of water. Discard the tubes and fat and then cut the kidney into cubes for stews or the pie.

Lamb or veal kidneys should be well washed in cold water and then broiled, baked or browned and added to savory vegetables.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man Finds Consolation for Loveless Marriage In Friendship With Understanding Older Woman; Anticipating Emotional Crisis, He Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a man 25 years old. I have been married five years. The marriage has been very unhappy for both of us. We are in disagreement on everything. Our ideals, ambitions, dispositions and, in fact, our whole outlook on life are in conflict. For example, I want children. My wife doesn't. I would like to settle down and spend most evenings at home. My wife's idea is that married couples should enjoy everything else in life first—parties, dancing, bridge, all forms of "night life," etc.; and if any time is left over for children, they can come later.

I am manager of a business and would be very happy and content with a quiet home life, rounded out with children. But I know that if my wife is to be satisfied, I must always be deprived of these things. I would have protested long ago, except that I adhere to the old-school belief that the marriage vow, "to love, honor and cherish (or obey), as long as we both shall live——" must be literally observed.

However, my unsatisfactory marriage is not the real problem. Through my work, I have become acquainted with a woman in another business and we have had occasion to see each other several times in the last two months. She is 12 years my senior and a very charming person. I sensed that she was very unhappy (as I am), and asked her about it. She told me she had been disappointed in love several years ago, and that very often she is lonely and depressed, needing someone to talk to.

By talking to her and trying to be friendly (because comprehending her need), I have learned that our views and objectives are much the same. We have enjoyed these talks very much, and they are having a strange effect on me. I don't know whether the emotion they have roused is pity, or the first phase of love. I am certain she wishes me to see her more often, and I know she has fallen in love with me. Also, I have told her that I cannot be unfaithful to my wife, regardless of our unhappy marriage—and that I must stop seeing her.

How shall I tell her that our friendship (it is not to be termed an "affair") must end? Or should I take this step? She seemed so hurt, when I first suggested it, that I haven't been able to stop seeing her. I want her to know, above all else, that I have enjoyed talking to her and encouraging her, and I want to keep her respect for me, as a friend. But if I stop seeing her, what will be her reaction?—if she really is in love with me?

I would like to say (without conceit), that she has changed very much and seems much happier, with a better outlook on life, since we have known each other. Our talks have given me the same feeling. If I stopped seeing her, would this destroy what has been built up? Would it cause her to lose faith in human nature and in me? Would her former unhappiness be intensified? What must I do, in fairness to all concerned?

able male. Moreover, any woman 37 years of age, who makes moan over a "disappointment in love" in years gone by, is something of a fool. She is showing cause why love passed her by.

If the woman "really is in love" with you, her "reaction" to your unalterable decision to stay apart from her probably will pass through the successive stages of (1) anguish; (2) resentment, and (3) philosophical acceptance, before (4) arriving finally at an abiding, respectful appreciation of your wisdom and strength, exerted in time to spare both of you much pointless misconduct and suffering.

In renouncing her friendship, because you are not free to enjoy it as both of you would like, you would be doing more to restore or to indorse her "faith in human nature and in you," than to destroy it—if she is a reasoning person. You would be giving her a living demonstration of the poetic sentiment, "I could not love thee, dear, so much, loved I not honor more."

How tell her that the friendship must end? Tell her simply that you care too much for her to selfishly play havoc with either her reputation or her feelings; that the very inspirational quality of the friendship gives you the strength to act to preserve its spiritual essence, which would waste away by imperceptible degrees, if you were to expose it to the emotional wear-and-tear of a makeshift romance.

A Stitch in Time Will Save Nine

DEAR R. J. E.: In view of (1) your conviction that the heartsick lady has fallen in love with you; (2) your growing sense of responsibility for her happiness, and (3) your high resolve to remain faithful to your wife, despite the unhappy marriage—it seems plain to me that the situation can be kept in control only by renouncing the friendship. Your one chance of keeping faith with your marriage vows lies in turning your back—sternly and finally—upon the "other woman's" wistful solicitations of attention. This, in my opinion, is the only thing you can do—"in fairness to all."

Inasmuch as you propose to continue your marriage, for honor's sake, despite its penalties, you would be doing the other woman no favor in conditioning her to your tantalizingly intermittent consolation—which would merely provoke her growing need of your society, rather than give her the emotional poise she needs. Furthermore, you would be subjecting your own nature to the terrific strain of temptation constantly confronted and resisted—so that in all probability, you would eventually become so nervously out-of-control as to betray your marriage vows in defiance to your conscience.

In view of your mutual heart hunger and compatible temperaments, involvement in an "affair" is almost inevitable, if the friendship persists in its present form. And, supposing an "affair" does develop, it will commit you irretrievably to a moral responsibility for the woman's welfare—a responsibility which does not exist today; and which, if ever written into the record, probably would be exploited to the utmost by the lady.

Her lack of reserve in bidding for your interest; her premature dependency upon your companionship; and, above all, her "hurt" reaction to your foresighted suggestion to discontinue the friendship, before it assumes indispensable proportions—these attitudes suggest a parasitical sort of feminine nature, jumping at the chance to twine itself relentlessly about any available, vulner-

Fair and Fat In '40 Can Be Slim in '41

This Is Popular Time of the Year To Start Reducing

By Ida Jean Kain

THIS IS the most popular time in the year to start reducing. Comes January 1, some 12,000,000 women—to take round figures—make up their minds to slim down and turn back the calendar.

As a year runs its course, we get too bogged down in the routine of living to pay much attention to the way we look. But a chance to start fresh opens our eyes and we can see that unless we do something with ourselves as time goes on, time does dreadful things to us.

I wish mirrors had memories and could reveal the way we looked a year ago alongside the way we look today. Then we wouldn't let things go on happening to us! But the best we can do is to try to take an impersonal view o fourselves.

Let's take stock of the woman in your mirror. How much too much does she weigh? To check more closely, how many of those pounds were added last year? And—be candid now—how old does she register?

Wandering Waistline

If your counterpart is a bit dumpy and has a rundown posture, she doesn't look any younger than she really is. Not that anyone wants to hang on to youth for dear life. That's silly. But is not very comforting to a woman to look every minute of her age.

If you think something should be done, let's get started. It is easier to go along with thousands of other reducers. And in the next three weeks we will take into account every figure problem—that wandering waistline, hopeless hips, flat chest, billowy bosom, thick and thin legs, and just general stoutness. In that short time you can lose ten pounds and take your measurements down by inches.

Perhaps the nicest thing about slimming in '41 is that you don't have to go hungry. And by applying the science of nutrition to your diet, you can actually improve your health as you doff 10, 20—or, if need be, 50 pounds. You could be 50 pounds slimmer by the end of this year. When you are slim, I will help you to get the habit of eating to stay slim—it can be done!

A happy and svelte New Year!

The Revelers

"Have a good time last night?"

"Perfectly marvelous!" I'm simply dead today."

"I never was so dead in my life. We went with Chuck and Liz to Jocko's."

"We went to the Bedlam Room. We didn't get home till 6 o'clock."

"We didn't get home till 8. We went to the Wet Towel for breakfast."

"I was dying to go there but we had to take Buzz and Toots home. Buzz passed out cold."

"You don't mean it! Well Chuck almost got arrested."

"No!"

"Yes, he got in a fight with the orchestra leader because he kept trying to play the drums. He certainly was a scream."

"Herbie Husk was the worst scream you ever saw last night. He kept putting confetti down strange women's backs. Ginger was perfectly furious."

"She never did have any sense of humor. Say, did you hear about Mike and Bunny?"

"No."

"Well, he took up with some blonde at the Jungle Gardens and Bunny had to go home alone."

"I guess it was terribly wild over there. I almost wish we'd gone there."

"It wasn't any wilder than it was at the Bedlam Room. Two women got in a fight over an accordionist and they had to call the police."

"No! Well I wanted to go there, but Larry simply would go to Jocko's. Anyway though, we had a lot of noise. They gave rattles and whistles and horns—"

"They gave automobile sirens at the Bedlam Room—oh yes, and balloons, and you simply couldn't see for the confetti."

"We had balloons and confetti and serpentine whistles and little caps with bells. Larry still has his on—and we had a seat right at the orchestra. Honestly my ear drums were almost blasted.."

"Did you run on to anybody last night?"

"Oh yes, Eddie and Ducky . . . and Kim and Snooks . . . Oh say, I wonder where Al and Babe were."

"They went to the Montmarte Stables. And Shep and Connie went to Gougem's Roof—they say the cover charge there alone was $15."

"We had to pay $10—"

"We had to pay $12.50, but they gave all the women lipsticks and peppermint canes."

"They gave compacts at the Pandemonium—that's where Dix and Kitty went. I understand he's having the doctor today—"

"Oh say! WHERE were Grace and Claude last night?"

"They didn't go anywhere."

"No!"

"Yes! They stayed home!"

"Of all things! Can you beat that?"

"I certainly can't!"

Capes Important In Star's Wardrobe

Hollywood, Calif. — Princely capes that sweep the floor with old-time romantic elegance are so important to stylist Orry-Kelly that he designed three of them for "The Great Lie," starring Bette Davis.

Most outstanding one is in natural camel's hair. The ornate embroidery over the shoulders and well down the front of the cape shows how Orry combines a rich sports fabric with luxuriant formal cloth. He used heavy white faille edged with gold bullion braid and strewn with gold beads and white misted sequins.

Ye Editor Makes Some New Year's Resolutions

Finds Satisfaction That at Least One 1940 Pledge Was Kept—as Result She Feels Fine . . . How Do You Feel?

By Hope Ridings Miller

NEVER AN OLD YEAR ends but I sit down and write myself a long list of resolutions with the hope, of course, that I shall keep at least a few of them the next twelve months.

For 1941, I have made so many that, if laid end to end, they could extend well into 1942. I may as well admit here and now that I took time out from yesterday afternoon's social circling to put them all down on paper, and I never enjoyed myself more. Perhaps getting them into print will help me keep them. So, here goes.

Hope Ridings Miller

I have firmly resolved:

To talk less and listen more, and to put practically everything I hear in the paper—knowing full well that if I don't some other columnist will.

To cooperate wholeheartedly with anybody who coyly observes, "But, my dear, I really don't like to have my name in the newspapers." (Truth is, in all my life I have known only three persons who sincerely disliked seeing themselves in print—and they were queer about a lot of other things, too.)

To cease describing 3-year-old dresses and last season's hats, as if they were up-to-the-minute creations . . . just because they happen to be worn by women whose names make news; and never, never again to mention an ensemble as "stunning," a hostess as "clever," a debutante as "pretty," or a bachelor-about-town as "entertaining" . . . unless he, she, or it actually is.

To learn the names of every one of the "Hockley boys," and to use them on the society page whenever I see fit . . . despite feeble protests from all, or any, that they have a strong passion for anonymity.

To take it as a matter of course when I see items that I have carried months before played up elsewhere as "a scoop."

To stifle the impulse to toss verbal bouquets indiscriminately, and to pare my copy of as many adjectives as possible.

To refrain from working myself into a fine frenzy when I hear a society story referred to as "publicity."

To devote a minimum amount of space to party decorations . . . unless they are unusual enough to merit detailed descriptions, and to omit the "paper-thin sandwiches and other tea-time dainties" entirely.

To play up persons who are interesting on their own accounts and to write as little as possible about those who have only official positions or social register listings to recommend them.

To stop wondering—when a hostess declines to give me her entire dinner list—who among her guests are the ones she doesn't want the world to know she is entertaining.

And finally, to keep all the aboved-named resolutions as long as practicable . . . but to have no compunction whatsoever about breaking any, or all, the moment personal, social, or domestic emergency arises.

This time last year my list was much longer, but with more than a degree of satisfaction I can say that at least one resolution was kept. On January 1, after staying up most of the night to see 1940 come in, I promised myself I would not be awake when it rolled out. Last night I shelved all my invitations and kept that resolution. Today, I feel fine. How do you feel?

Midnight Toast Drunk to U. S. By Roosevelt

Family, Few Friends Greet New Year At White House

At midnight President Roosevelt drank a toast to the United States. He was surrounded by a small family group and a few intimate friends, who earlier had dined together at the White House.

Negro spirituals were sung last evening by a colored chorus headed by Lehman Hardison, former ditch digger. For about an hour the President and his family listened to this group—most of them WPA workers—from Detroit. Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Morgan were White House guests, as were Mrs. Dorothy Kemp Roosevelt and her daughter, Miss Amy Roosevelt, of Michigan.

Yesterday afternoon merry shouts and squeals reverberated through the White House as over 30 youngsters—ranging from the ages of 2 to 8 years—enjoyed a Christmas party and a Punch and Judy show. Two-year-old "Joe," as Franklin Delano Roosevelt 3d has been dubbed by the family, was the only grandchild on hand to enjoy the party. Diana Hopkins, daughter of Harry Hopkins, was hostess to a group of her young contemporaries. A young house guest is Eleanor Patricia Lynch, daughter of Thomas N. Lynch. Walter Wilkinson, of Minglestown, Pa., served up the marionette show.

Mrs. Roosevelt revealed the schedule at her press conference yesterday, which she preceded with a trip to the hairdresser. An interested guest at the conference was Mrs. Dorothy Kemp Roosevelt, a handsome person with gray hair. She wore a cherry red suit, matching feather toque and a pale pink sweater. Mrs. Roosevelt also had chosen red wool, accented with heavy gold jewelry.

On Monday morning, Mrs. Roosevelt will attend the first of Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's morning musicales at the Mayflower Hotel. That is the day the President will deliver his address before Congress. In the afternoon Mrs. Roosevelt will attend a tea at St. Thomas rectory.

Inspired by her Christmas gift, "The White Cliffs," by Alice Duer Miller, from Actress Lynn Fontaine, Mrs. Roosevelt remarked that women who wish to help in this emergency should keep in mind Miss Miller's passage, "And doing dull tasks that keep a Nation strong." She added that too many women wish to be a part of a grand movement when there are plenty of important things to be done in their own communities.

C. Mathews Dicks See Old Year Out At Home Party

Several dinner parties were given last evening to celebrate the arrival of the New Year and among the hosts were Mr. and Mrs. C. Matthews Dick, entertaining at their home on Massachusetts Avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Dick, who usually spend Christmas in Lake Forest, Ill., with his family, have remained at their home here during the recent holidays. Among those dining with them last night were Mr. and Mrs. Rodman Wanamaker and Mr. and Mrs. Jasper DuBose.

Miss Andrews Gives Tea for Miss Ranneft

200 of Younger Set Honor Daughter Of Dutch Naval Aide

Gayly informal and very much a younger-set party was the tea given yesterday afternoon by Miss Mary Lord Andrews in honor of Miss Coby Ranneft, daughter of the Netherlands Naval Attache and Mme. Meijer Ranneft.

The Seminary Hill, Va., home of the hostess' mother, Mrs. Atherton Macondray, was the scene of the event, which was attended by about 200 members of the deb and post-deb contingent, as well as several friends of Miss Andrews' younger sisters, Helen Tucker and Carter Randolph Andrews.

Both Miss Ranneft and Miss Andrews finished at Holton Arms last June, but this year they are taking a post-graduate course in home economics at the same school. A number of their classmates were among those present yesterday. A sizable group of young men was also on hand for the party.

Receiving in the drawing room of the Macondray home, Miss Andrews was trimly turned out in a red velveteen frock; while Miss Ranneft had chosen a brown crepe frock embroidered in green. The young ladies who assisted at the tea table were chosen as they arrived, and the party proceeded at a merry pace until almost dinner time.

Later last evening, Mrs. Macondray left by plane for San Francisco where she will join her husband, Commander Macondray, who has arived from Hawaii. Mrs. Macondray expects to return home in about ten days.

Parks Is Host At New Year Fete

Entertaining at a midnight supper party, James Parks was host at one of the merriest New Year's Eve fetes on the calendar. The party was given in his Massachusetts avenue apartment and a strolling musician lead the guests in singing such songs as "Auld Lang Syne." Supper was served buffet style at this small and informal party.

Among the guests were Admiral and Mrs. George Pettengill, and her sister, Mrs. Ernest Wagner, of New York; Arthur Bradley Campbell and his nieces, the Misses Isabelle and Marjorie Meuser, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Chetwynd, of the British Embassy; Lieut. Peter Smithers, of the British Embassy, and Mr. and Mrs. William MacCracken.

Members of the young set attending were Miss Eleanor Meem, Fred Roy, Miss Sylvia Szchenyi, Jock Merriam, Miss Miriam Scott, Arthur Vandenberg, jr., Robert Waggaman, William Merriam, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Watson, Mr. and Mrs. Igor Cassini, Miss Diana Rowland, Miss Emily French Myers and Miss Ruth Dove.

Frances Riesley Is Party Hostess

Miss Frances L. Riesley entertained at an afternoon party yesterday from 5 until 7 o'clock at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carl William Riesley.

About 75 young people attended the party and many of them were classmates of Miss Riesley at Mary Washington College. She wore a black moire frock with a fitted pink jacket. Mrs. Riesley selected a green lace gown. Assisting at the punch bowl was Mrs. Y. J. Wright, who wore a peach chiffon gown.

A few of the young ladies attending were Miss Barbara Ames, Miss Mary Ellen Henry, Miss Jane Brownlee, Miss Shirley Bishop, Miss Ruth Raymond, Miss Rita Thorn, Miss Harriet Burton and Miss Marie Gay Owens.

Mary Stanley Is Betrothed

At a New Year's Eve party at the Forest Hills Club, Newark, N. J., Mrs. F. Taylor Leaming, of Springfield, Mo., announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Mary Emily Stanley, of Washington, to Charles Sanderson Barnum, jr. The prospective bridegroom is a former resident of Boulder, Colo., now living in East Orange, N. J.

The bride-elect attended George Washington University, where she studied in the school of government and was made a member of Pi Beta Phi Sorority. Mr. Barnum, the son of Charles S. Barnum, sr., is a graduate of the University of Colorado's School of Business Administration. He is a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon and Delta Sigma Pi business fraternity.

Audrey Campbell, Mr. Leiter Fete Betrothed Couple

Miss Audrey Campbell and Thomas Leiter entertained last night in honor of Mr. Leiter's sister, Miss Mary Leiter, and her fiance, Charles Thomas Claggett, at the North Wales Club, Warrenton. The event, a dance, began at 10:30 and continued until daylight, with a Hungarian orchestra from New York playing during the evening.

The whole club was decorated for the occasion with southern smilax, golden rapture roses and Spanish moss. In the ballroom, walls were covered with arbor vitae, hung with Spanish moss and lights in the shapes of bunches of white grapes dotted the entire ceiling.

Staying at the club for the party were Mrs. Joseph Leiter and her daughter, Miss Nancy Leiter; Mr. Claggett, Mr. and Mrs. Gale McLean, Benjamin Plunkett, of the British Embassy, Brett Wood, Cuthbert Train and Dr. and Mrs. Harry Kerr.

Buffet Supper Served to 150

At 1 o'clock a buffet supper of both hot and cold dishes was served to the more than 150 guests, and a bar set up in the marble room dispensed refreshments all evening.

Before the dance a number of people in the surrounding countryside entertained at dinner, later taking their guests on to the dance. They included Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Winmill, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Greene, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Guffey, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Charrington, Mrs. Isabel Cotton Smith and Dr. and Mrs. James Sinclair.

Guests Included F. D. Roosevelt, Jrs.

Among the guests at the dance were Mr. and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr.; Mr. and Mrs. Brice Allen, of Boston; Joseph Alsop, of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. John de Sibour, Mr. and Mrs. Blaise de Sibour, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Garrett, James F. Mitchell, jr., Jack Vietor, Griff Warfield, Miss Angelica Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. Newell Ward, Mr. and Mrs. Murray Black, Mr. and Mrs. Melville Bearns, Mr. and Mrs. Amory Carhart; Mr. and Mrs. Bentley Hoeber, of Arlington, brother-in-law and sister of the bridegroom-to-be, and Mrs. Mary Bowie Claggett Rust, another sister of Mr. Claggett, also Miss Elizabeth Claggett, of Washington, also a sister of Mr. Claggett.

Other guests included two of Mr. Claggett's first cousins, Samuel Alexander, of Fredericksburg, and his fiance, Miss Margaret Wallace (their engagement was announced on Saturday), and John Alexander, of Leesburg, also Miss Sarah Harrison, Miss Emily Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Winslow Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Harkness, Stirling Harrison, Capt. Charles Harrison, Fred Malone, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur White, Mr. and Mrs. James Hamilton, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson McIlvaine, Mr. and Mrs. Sterling Larrabie, Mr. and Mrs. George Sloane, Mr. and Mrs. James Van Allen, of Long Island.

Ceremony Held In St. Thomas' Church Here

At a quiet ceremony yesterday morning in the Church of Saint Thomas the Apostle, Miss Mary Eileen Loftus became the bride of Lieut. Frederick Riker Tansil. The Rev. Joseph Moran, pastor of the church, officiated at the ceremony and the nuptial mass which followed. He was assisted by the Rev. John Heenan, S. J., a cousin of the bridegroom.

The former Miss Loftus is the daughter of Mrs. Nellie Stanley Conroy and the late Austin Loftus. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Frederick G. Tansill, of Washington.

Given in marriage by her cousin, John Mangan, of Scranton, Pa., the bride wore a street-length frock of sandune crepe with matching accessories and a corsage of white orchids.

Miss Mary Gertrude Melvin, a cousin of the bride, was her only attendant, and Robert Tansill was best man for his brother. Only members of the immediate families witnessed the ceremony. A breakfast followed at the home of the bride's mother, and later, the couple left on a wedding trip.

Lieut. Tansill is assistant professor of military science and tactics at Georgetown University.

Capital Whirl

By Sally Swift

ALL OF US who gathered with friends last night to bid good-bye to the old year did so with the fervent prayer that the new year may bring for each and everyone, especially those across the seas, much happier and better days. New Year's Eve was celebrated for the most part in small, congenial groups. Count and Countess de Limur asked friends in for a buffet supper at their home on Wisconsin Avenue. Different ages, French and American, mingled happily, the guests being chosen among the contemporaries of attractive Helen Marie de Limur as well as from those of her mother and father.

Many of us could not help thinking of Paris and of other and peaceful New Year's Eve celebrations in the then "City of Light." The French have a custom of embracing at the stroke of midnight anyone who is nearest and at the same time wishing "Bonne Annee." The trick is to manage to find yourself near someone you like as midnight approaches.

THE FIRST SECRETARY of the British Embassy and Mrs. Christopher Bramwell asked friends in for a small New Year's Eve party when the good wishes at midnight had an especial significance because of the Bramwells' imminent departure for England. The British custom of joining hands at midnight and singing "Auld Lang Syne" brought tears to the eyes at the thought of friends who were singing this old song in underground shelters or in the wastes of the desert. Among the Bramwells' guests were John Foster and the Anthony Rumbolds of the British Embassy; Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Pell, Robert Coe and Mrs. Sutherland Mayo. Also present were two attractive women who are doing their bit working at the British Embassy, Barbara Wace and Lady Gormanston, and Ricardo Siri and Miguel Guirno-Lavalle, of the Argentine Embassy.

THE SUBDEB group came in for more than its share of New Year's Eve festivities with two dances besides luncheons and dinners. Mrs. McKee Dunn entertained some of the young set at luncheon in honor of her subdeb daughter, Lanier, taking them on afterward for an afternoon of skating.

In the evening Bob Longyear entertained his teenage friends at a gay dance and Mrs. Nordell Lloyd gathered in the friends of her younger daughter, Karen, for dancing at her spacious home on R Street. Among those dining the young before these parties was Mrs. Richard Porter Davidson, whose dinner was in honor of her daughter, Daisy.

THE U. S. AMBASSADOR to Poland and Mrs. Anthony Biddle came to the Capital to spend New Year's Eve, having arrived back from their recent Cuban trip in time to spend Christmas at their home in Philadelphia. They were accompanied on both trips by Mrs. Biddle's daughter and son-in-law, Prince and Princess Aleksander Hohenlohe, who were so popular here last winter when they lived in Georgetown.

I hear that pretty Peggy Hohenlohe did not spend all her time in Cuba going to parties. She did some very good work broadcasting for the Cuban branch of the British war relief at the instigation of her friend, Mme. Enrique de Sandoval. The former Maria Luisa de la Torriente, daughter of a former Cuban Ambassador to the United States, is very active in Havana in the cause of British relief.

HAD THE BIDDLES and Hohenlohes remained in Havana for the New Year's Eve celebrations they would undoubtedly have followed with their many Cuban friends, the charming old customs of the country. At the first stroke of the magic hour of midnight every Cuban gives a little jump, both feet off the floor. This jumps him from the old year right into the new, and starts him off with a bang—a little one. Then, if he has a wish which he very much desires to see fulfilled, even to the point of risking a choking, he snatches up 12 grapes and on each of the 12 strokes of the clock eats one. If he accomplishes this without choking on grapes or laughter his wish will come true.

Another New Year's Eve Cuban custom which also has its dangers—at least for those underneath—is that of throwing a basin-full of water out of the window at midnight to the cry of "Bad luck, go away." This is said to bring better luck to the one who throws the water than to the one who may receive it.

Miss Finkenstaedt Is Returning Today

Miss Sita Finkenstaedt, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt, left yesterday for Philadelphia, where she was the guest of Miss Elizabeth Thayer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Thayer.

Miss Thayer and Miss Finkenstaedt were classmates at the French School. Last evening, Miss Finkenstaedt attended a dinner given for Miss Thayer and a dance later. Miss Finkenstaedt will return to Washington this afternoon.

Club Women Mourn Death of Mrs. Lawson

Past President of General Federation From 1935-38 Succumbs in Tulsa, Okla.; Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar Pays Tribute

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor

A sad New Year's message for the club women of the Nation was news of the death yesterday of Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson at her home in Tulsa, Okla., following an illness of several weeks. Mrs. Lawson was president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs from 1935 to 1938, preceding Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar. She is survived by her son and daughter-in-law and three grandchildren.

Although she spent only part of the time each year of her administration at the General Federation headquarters, 1734 N Street

MRS. ROBERTA CAMPBELL LAWSON

Northwest, Mrs. Lawson made many friends in the Capital and had returned here several times since retiring from office. Her last visit was a brief stop a few weeks ago on her way to New York City, to attend the Herald Tribune conference.

Mrs. Lawson was born in the Indian Territory, which is now part of Oklahoma, and was the granddaughter of the Rev. Charles Journeycake, last chief of the Delaware Indians. She had been prominent in club work and musical circles in the Middle West before her election as president of the federation. Not only was she a patron of music but she was the author of a little book on Indian melodies.

Her Death Leaves 3 Past Presidents

Her death leaves but three past presidents of the General Federation: Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, of California, president from 1920 to 1924; Mrs. John F. Sipple, of Baltimore, president from 1928 to 1932, and Mrs. Grace Poole Reynolds, of Massachusetts and Kentucky, president from 1932 to 1935.

"The membership of the General Federation of Women's Clubs will be shocked to hear of the death of our junior past president," said Mrs. Dunbar in a statement issued at federation headquarters. "We were expecting her to take an important part in the Golden Jubilee Triennial next May. We shall miss her friendly smile, her ready cooperation and wise counsel.

"Mrs. Lawson chosen as the theme of her administration 'Education for Living.' For three years she guided and directed the thought of our members toward the enrichment of life through a better adjustment of husman relations.

Led Campaigns For Many Reforms

"She traveled extensively and was well acquainted with the needs and unsolved problems of our people. Her courage led her into determined efforts toward the solution of such problems. She initiated a concentrated national campaign for the abolition of marihuana; urged research and continuous study of taxation; set up an intensive safety drive in each State federation; worked for the repeal of the section of the Economy Act which prohibited wives and husbands concurrently holding civil service positions; opposed the reorganization plan for the Supreme Court; guided the General Federation into membership in the National Consumer-Retailer Council, and constantly advanced the idea for a National Academy of Public Affairs for the training of personnel in civil and diplomatic Governmental service.

"Mrs. Lawson's courage, her loyalty to her friends and their interests and her abiding faith in God endeared her to countless people who will feel a great personal loss. We also recognize the loss to her home city, her State and Nation."

Eastern Star To Hold Annual Tea Today

The Eastern Star of the District will have its annual New Year's Day tea at the clubhouse, 2600 Sixteenth Street, the side of the new Eastern Star Temple this afternoon.

Mrs. Minnie J. Burdine, worthy grand matron, and Edward C. Steagall, worthy grand patron, will act as hostess and host.

Wellesley Students, Faculty Member Address Alumnae

Wellesley alumnae were taken back to the campus at the Washington Wellesley Club's annual Christmas luncheon yesterday when they were addressed by Dr. Dorothy Robathan, of the faculty, and several vacationing undergraduates. Presiding at the luncheon, which was held at the Y. W. C. A., was Mrs. Bernard A. Chandler, club president.

Dr. Robathan, chairman of the Wellesley Latin department and a member of the class of 1919, reviewed the changes which have taken place at the college in the past 20 years, from the faculty point of view. Establishment of a faculty club has improved living conditions greatly, she said, and opportunities for research have been increased. As for the college war work program, she explained that all such activities were taking the place of "bridge games rather than of academic pursuits."

Speaking for the student body were Shirley Harris and Rachel Ryan, class of 1944; Brerton Sturtevant and Dorothy Jacobs, class of 1942, and Elizabeth Adams, '41. According to Miss Jacobs, a Wellesley College ambulance unit already is operating in England, and funds soon will be available to send over a second one.

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS—1941

From Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs:

"We are on the threshold of a New Year, an unknown, uncertain year. This constitutes our challenge for preparedness and defense—the preparation of self and of our groups for additional services and the readiness to defend those things which are important and essential to us, our children, our communities and our social institutions. May it never be said of American women that we failed to accept the responsibilites which we shall undoubtedly face.

"Let us, with courage, unite our efforts with other agencies and forces which seek for all mankind the blessings of 'freedom, equality, justice and humanity.' To the attainment of these objectives may we pledge our faith, loyalty, and willingness to make any required sacrifice."

From Miss Marguerite Wells, president of the National League of Women Voters:

"The appropriate wish for a happy 1941 is better addressed to one's self than to others. For what can we all wish but to be equal to our responsibilities in the fateful year ahead?

"It is almost a terrifying thing to look back upon great turning points in history and note how often an individual or a small group has influenced events. In momentous times, men and women find greater power in themselves than they knew they possessed. Even those who had come to beleieve themselves to be tired or old suddenly find their second wind when the need comes for increased exertion.

"Thus I make my New Year with a second wind to those who have anything to do and more power to those men and women who are carrying responsibility and facing opportunity."

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

WITH A DAUGHTER, who has just made her bow to Washington society, Mrs. Lilo McMullin Perrin, jr., is known here this season chiefly as "Yvonne Perrin's mother." But this is not a designation to which she is accustomed. In Stockton, Calif., where she has been head of the city's convention bureau for five years, she is noted as Betty Perrin, who is generalissimo of Stockton's boosters.

"When she took the job as head of the convention bureau, Stockton could check up about $72,000 a year to the credit of the conventions held in the city. Now the conclaves bring in $750,000 annually.

At the time she took over, she not only had to run the bureau but raise money for it, as it was sponsored by civic groups and not self-supporting. Within the year, however, convinced of its value to the city, an item for its maintenance was included in the municipal appropriations by the city fathers.

To the question, "How did you make such a success of the convention bureau?" Mrs. Perrin answers, "Tongue and shoe leather."

Convention Means Selling and Buying

It involved a three-way selling job, she explains. First "selling" the local groups the idea of bidding for the convention. Then helping them "sell" the larger group the idea of coming to Stockton and finally "selling" the city to the visitors. In this connection, she points out that a large automobile factory in Detroit was transferred to Stockton, as a result of the visit of executives to that city during a convention.

Aside from the possibility of convincing visitors of the advantages of the place for residence and industry she says a convention is of great value to the local merchants. It isn't only the buying of the convention delegates that is to be considered, or of those who just come along to see the show, but of all the local members beforehand.

"Just watch the local club women buy new hats and new dresses when a convention of their organization is coming to town," she reminded me—and I had to admit she was right.

Seventy per cent of every convention dollar goes into wages, she added.

Incidentally, she always wears the same dress and hat throughout a convention so people can easily identify her.

Mrs. Perrin, who is the daughter of D. C. Supreme Court Commissioner and Mrs. William R. Harr, began her study for a career as a commercial artist, "drawing wooden Indians at Corcoran Art School." Then she married and went to Williams, Ariz., at a time when cooking was still done there on a coal range and water was bought out there at $1 a barrel.

From Heirlooms To Airplanes

From there, she and her husband went to Phoenix, where she became interested in Chamber of Commerce balls—her first activity in such community enterprises. Ten years ago the family moved to Stockton. In 1934 she came East to New York and for a year worked in dress design with a leading stylist. Returning to California, she did designing for Gantner & Mattern for a time in San Francisco, commuting from there from Stockton. Then she was asked to stage an heirloom show for the Stockton Museum, and the antiques launched her squarely into her present job.

Junior Leaguers Honor National Representative

Miss Gloria Chandler Discusses Children's Entertainment Vehicles

Twenty members of the Washington Junior League gathered yesterday at the league headquarters for a luncheon in honor of Miss Gloria Chandler of Chicago, field representative of the Association of Junior Leagues of America. Miss Sara Spencer, of the Children's Theater Press of Charleston, W. Va., and Miss Lucille Jenkins also were honor guests.

Miss Chandler talked informally about the work the Junior League could do in providing children's entertainment through plays, marionette shows and the radio.

The local Junior League was represented by an exhibit at the Mayflower Hotel in connection with the conference of the American Educational Theater Association, just closed. There were five puppets for "Hansel and Gretel" and sketches by Mrs. Robert W. Parker, of costumes for the new marionette show, "Rumplestiltakin" now in production.

Among those present were Mrs. Thomas A. Knowles, chairman of the Arts Section, who was hostess; Mrs. Detlow Marthinson, chairman of the marionette committee; Mrs. Andrew Cruse, Mrs. Julie Camp, Miss Jane Culbertson, Miss Barbara Bolling, Mrs. John Ward Cutler, Mrs. John O. Henderson, Mrs. Arthur Hudson, Mrs. B. Lowndes Jackson, Mrs. A. A. Houghteling, Miss Juliet Dulaney, Mrs. F. Vernon Foster, Mrs. Francis Almirall, Miss Elizabeth Houghton, Mrs. Thacher Winslow, Mrs. Robert W. Wilson, Mrs. Eugene Sloan, Mrs. Robert Watson, Miss Elizabeth Sladen and Mrs. David Karrick.

Beauty, the Waif, To Be a Joy At Orphanage

Beauty, a springer spaniel with a brown and white coat and wistful brown eyes, is looking forward to the happiest New Year of her life. She has a home and more playmates than almost any dog in Washington.

A few weeks ago she was wandering the streets, lost and bewildered, when some kind person took her in and called the Animal Rescue eague. At the league's kennels she waited and waited for someone to come and claim her but nobody did. She was happy however, as she had made friends there, among them, Mrs. Merton E. Twogood, president of the league, who promised she would find a home for her.

Just before Christmas Beauty was sent as a gift to the Hillcrest Orphanage on Nebraska Avenue. Madeline Arnold, age 12, is the child to whom she has been given for her special pet, but as she loves all of the children she will never be lonesome when Madeline is off at school.

Capt. Shafroth to Talk At D. A. R. Unit Meeting

There will be a meeting of the committee of national defense through patriotic education of the Daughters of the American Revolution Friday morning at 11 at the D. A. R. Chapter House, 1732 Massachusetts Avenue.

Capt. John F. Shafroth, director of the Naval Reserves, Bureau of Navigation, as guest speaker, will discuss "The Place the Navy Takes in Our National Defense Program." Mrs. Pearl Michael Shaffer is the chairman.

Dames of Loyal Legion To Meet Tomorrow

The District Society, Dames of the Loyal Legion, will hold its January meeting at the Highlands tomorrow.

The business meeting will be preceded by a luncheon, and at 2:30 Paul Murphy, of the Pan American Union, will address the society on "A Phase of Pan American Relations."

Mrs. Hugh Cairnes Smith, is president of the society.

Hitler Leads Life Of Wakeful Spartan

Gets but Four to Six Hours of Rest a Day; Quarters Are Simple

(Spend a day with Adolf Hitler in this third of four daily stories on the opposing war leaders, Winston Churchill and Hitler.)

By Preston Grover

Berlin (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—Adolf Hitler lives a personal life of Spartan simplicity.

His daily life is a mass of hard work but by no means is it regulated to conform to the tradition of "Prussian discipline." In training and contacts he is an unregimented Bavarian, although he has molded the country into a disciplined whole strictly after the Prussian fashion.

The Reichschancellery, where he spends much of his time, is one of the richest buildings in Berlin and compares in interior decoration with the ancient palaces of the Kaiser.

ADOLF HITLER

He Sleeps Little

But in the center of the massive building are Hitler's private quarters in a contrast of unadorned simplicity.

He sleeps little, going for days on end with but four to six hours rest in 24. He pops out of a simple army-styled bed at 8 a. m., at least by 9.

The only exception to this routine comes when he is at his Berchtesgaden retreat, in the Bavarian Alps near Oberalzburg. There he lets himself go, if he is not pressed with emergencies, and sleeps himself out.

He has three personal servants—named Linge, Krause and Junge—but shaves himself each morning after arising.

Servants on 8-Hour Shifts

The three servants, all married and with children, rotate 8-hour shifts. They travel with him to Berlin, Munich and Berchtesgaden.

After shaving and dressing, Hitler begins work at once on any pressing tasks. He breakfasts at 11 o'clock, usually on fruit, and lets Kannenberg, his favorite cook for many years, rack his brains over some new vegetable dish for the day's remaining two meals.

Except that he takes no meat, Hitler is not an especially choosy eater. It is unclear even to his closest friends whether he sticks to vegetables as a necessity due to his World War gassing or as a matter of principle.

He likes small animals, and it is known that he hates the killing of animals. He refuses to see them in captivity and once freed a magnificent eagle sent to him by his supporters. Upon becoming Chancellor in 1933 he issued an anti-vivisection order.

Drinks 1½ Per Cent Beer

Hitler occasionally drinks tea or weak coffee and no alcohol except 1½ per cent beer.

After breakfast he comes down from his quarters to work in his expansive chancellery office where he has three private secretaries, Frauleins Wolf, Schroeder and Darranowski.

On his desk first are placed the main German newspapers. He reads them quickly but carefully, not overlooking the sports and theatrical columns.

Before him also are placed radio bulletins from all parts of the world. He gets fresh press bulletins every hour during the day.

Always In Touch With Berlin

At no time is Hitler out of connection with Berlin, even when traveling by plane, train or automobile caravan. His special train includes a car loaded to the windows with radio equipment to receive and send messages as well as to bring in a complete world news report. The same system is devised for auto caravans.

In his office he dictates letters and speeches for the most part into recording machines. Often, however, he dictates to a secretary who takes it directly on a typewriter while he paces the room.

During these hours the Fuehrer permits no interruptions. He edits his own speeches for accurate literary style. Some of his sentences, by the way, prove inexpressively tough for translating into English.

Often he calls in his advisers for roundtable discussions.

Called a Good Listener

Contrary to the prevailing belief abroad that he often bullies his intimates to force his own views on them, associates insist he is easy to talk to on the most difficult problems, is an extremely good listener and possesses a phenomenal memory.

From time to time he supplements his memory by jotting down notes in a small book he always keeps handy. If an adviser opens up a field of thought strange or interesting to him, Hitler questions him closely. He is said readily to accept the ideas of others when convinced they are better than his own.

His principal military advisers are Gen. Alfred Jodl and Field Marshal Wilhelm Keitel, chief of army high command.

Jodl is a comparative youngster with many fresh ideas appealing to Hitler. During the course of the war Keitel has become increasingly close to him because of his capacity for using drawings to clarify complex military situations.

Close associates say Hitler has an almost limitless capacity to absorb and remember details and that he often confounds his own advisers by recalling even the most technical matters.

Night finds him continuing his study, in recent months more especially of military problems. Before the beginning of the Western Front campaign last spring, his work desk each night was a tangle of military maps and texts from which he studied battle plans reaching back as far a 1,000 years.

Hitler likes the opera, vaudeville and the movies. He especially is pleased with one love story filmed in Bavaria and called "The Naughty Village." His favorite composer is Wagner.

Hates Closed Cars

He plays no games of diversion, follows no sport.

He detests closed cars, rides only in open ones, and most often sits up front beside the chauffeur.

His personal exercise is limited, but he burns up a tremendous amount of energy on the job. He enjoys an occasional walk in the chancellery grounds or out on the street in the evenings. He prefers to walk alone, although frequently in his chancellery strolls he is accompanied by diplomats and others.

The black-shirted S. S. Corps was formed early in the '20s for his special protection, but on his walks he does not accept such a guard. At Berchtesgaden he is accompanied by a shepherd dog, apparently his only pet. Years ago two of his dogs were poisoned in Munich, and he angrily told one intimate he felt as if he had "lost half his voters."

Say He Likes Children

Associates insist Hitler has a personal fondness for children, although he has never married. Nevertheless, his poses with children as disclosed in "publicity pictures" show him stiff, uncomfortable.

His only recent public demonstration of much outward emotion came when he was advised of Marshal Petain's offer of France's capitulation.

At that time he exhibited almost boyish exuberance, stamping his foot and patting his stomach.

Except for a smile and constantly repeated salute, his public demonstrations are rather limited.

Defying Italian Bombs, 6,000 Greeks Dwell in Slimy Tunnels Beneath Island City of Corfu

By Daniel De Luce
Associated Press Staff Writer

Corfu, Dec. 28 (delayed).—The Greek island city of Corfu is dead above ground, but in slimy tunnels 6,000 women, children and old men live in fear of Italain bombs.

I saw them today, cooking soup over charcoal fires, nursing babies, sewing clothing in odorous caverns ankle-deep in mud.

They had existed like this since November 1—58 days in misery of which more than 50 were marked by Fascist air raids. Bombs have killed about 90 persons and injured that many more. Corfu, so-called "Queen of the Ionian Isles," is an easy target for Italian pilots. So far, not one antiaircraft shell has been fired in its defense.

(Press dispatches reported a heavy raid on Corfu Tuesday.)

No peasants came to market. I walked by many shops and homes which were either closed because of bomb damage or blasted to ruins. In the town's newest quarter, debris still rises in huge mounds where four or five story apartment houses were smashed by attacks more than a month ago.

The Compiello district, near the waterfront, was littered with wreckage. I inspected a shattered concrete vault where a 200-kilogram Italian bomb interrupted a Christmas dance of 22 young Greeks. All were torn to bits.

Authorities estimated that 40 per cent of Corfu was uninhabitable. Another 20 per cent is badly damaged, but can still afford shelter.

Five churches lie in ruins, but hundreds of devout Greeks worship from dawn to dark in Saint Spiridions. The hard-pressed Greek government has dispatched medical aid and established relief agencies for a thousand impoverished families.

Funds have been set up to send 500 mothers and children to the country. Public health physicians express sharp concern over thousands of tunnel dwellers during the damp winter months.

Assessors Raise Arlington Figures By $2,069,100

An increase of $2,069,100 in the valuation of property in Arlington County was announced yesterday by John Omohundro, chairman of the reassessment board.

The total assessment effective 1941 is $40,913,040, as against the 1940 assessment of $38,844,940.

The reassessment was based upon the check between 25,000 and 30,000 pieces of property, Omohundro said.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

One of the outstanding Federal employe grievances is the so-called "average" clause, which has the practical effect of keeping down employe salaries. However, a Budget Bureau survey revealed that the "average" clause has surprisingly little effect. The bureau's study covered 81,376 Government jobs here. It found only 2,424, or less than 3 per cent, who were in "locked" grades and who couldn't be given salary raises, even if they earned them. And of the 2,424, only 1,698 were eligible for pay boosts.

Most significant fact the survey produced was that 57.3 per cent of the employes covered were drawing salaries at the entrance rate of the grade; in other words, the lowest possible sum the employes could be paid. Only 2.18 per cent were at the top of their grade. Budget Bureau will recommend strongly to Congress that the "average" clause be stricken from future appropriation bills. In a report to Congress, it will say:

"Such conditions" (referring to the average clause) afford little encouragement to a new appointee, for his advancement in salary depends not only on his efficiency and competency, which he himself controls, but upon matters over which he has no control, however conscientiously and energetically he may apply himself to his work. The employe who has been in the service for years faces precisely the same discouraging prospect. Until the grade is "unlocked" he cannot receive the higher salary to which his efficiency rating may entitle him."

Specifically, the effect of the "average" clause is to prevent the average salary in all grades from exceeding the average of any grade. That sounds pretty complicated, but here's how it works as a practical matter: The three Civil Service Commissioners formerly were classified at the top of the professional grade. The salary range of the grade was from $8,000 to $9,000; the average, of course, was $8,500. So all three commissioners were paid $8,500. The average could have been maintained if one commissioner were paid $9,000, another $8,500, and the third $8,000.

Full names are required on Civil Service applications. Here's the record long-distance name received by the commission: Hobert McKinley Jeremiah John Joseph Moses Peter Abraham Isaac Glory Hallelujah Smith. He's really an unusual Smith. Other odd names on file are Willie ⅝ Smith, and Hartford New Haven Connecticut Hill.

M. L. Ramsey, REA's director of information and research, has been loaned to Federal Works for an indefinite period by Agriculture. . . . Milton Eisenhower, who has been holding down two of Agriculture's toughest jobs for the past four years, is being given some relief. He's being relieved of the job as director of information and he'll spend full-time coordinating land use facilities. . . . Railroad Retirement Board will release between 30 and 40 stenographers the end of January. The stenos were hired to set up prior service record files.

War Department has appointed Harry S. Holland assistant director of civilian personnel to ease the load on Heath Onthank, personnel director. Like Onthank, Holland formerly worked at the Social Security Board, where he was assistant chief of field offices. He helped War establish field offices before he was made assistant director. . . .

Labor Department has a birthday this week. It was the fourth anniversary of the creation of an office of director of personnel and administrative management. Robert Smith has been director since the office was established. Today all departments, except Justice, and most agencies, have directors of personnel, but most of them have been created recently.

Labor Secretary Frances Perkins created the Labor personnel office and clothed her personnel director with vast responsibility and authority at a time when other officials were somewhat skeptical about the whole business. Patronage jobs have been reduced to a minimum since the office was created, from 8,000 jobs in 1936, to 275 today. Competent personnel technicians are in demand today. They are riding high and are apparently in a safe spot. But they are being cautious; if Congress knocks out their funds again it'll be years before personnel management can get itself established in the Government service. Private industry long ago recognized the value of personnel management.

Speech Teachers Get Scientific Report On Voice Changes of Adolescent Youths

Post Staff Photos.

WATCHING LIPS—Miss Frances Harrod Downes demonstrates lip reading instructions with a pupil from a District school at a session of the National Association of Teachers of Speech. Mrs. Helen G. Francis (upper picture) shows how a pupil learns to correct her speech by watching lip movements in a mirror

The teen-age boy who is the most miserable creature on earth when his changing voice alternates between a high falsetto and an uncertain bass can take consolation.

He is making a contribution to science.

As much was explained yesterday to the National Association of Teachers of Speech by a University of Iowa researcher who has spent more than three years studying these hapless youths, their pitch levels and voice breaks.

In a report based upon the most penetrating study of its kind ever conducted, Dr. Grant Fairbanks of the University of Iowa pointed out that the greatest drop in pitch level in a male's lifetime occurs in his 15th year.

In collaboration with Dr. E. Thayer Curray, University of Oklahoma, Dr. Fairbanks observed 18 boys, 6 each of the ages, 10, 14 and 18. The two younger groups were from Iowa City public schools and the 18-year-olds were University of Iowa freshmen.

The two collaborators found that, between 10 and 18 in boys, the pitch level of the voice falls a full octave. Only one-sixth of the total drop occurs from 10 to 14. In the fifteenth year fully one-half of the drop occurs, Dr. Fairbanks said, the remainder developing in the next three years.

Dr. Fairbanks revealed plans to follow his pitch level and voice-break studies with an investigation of sounds made by newborn infants.

In a luncheon address at the speech teachers' twenty-fifth anniversary meeting at the Hotel Mayflower yesterday, a newspaperman gave the cream of America's elocutionists a demonstration in their art.

Prefacing his talk with the frank acknowledgement that his remarks would be labeled propaganda, Sir Willmott Lewis, Washington correspondent for the London Times, delivered a throbbing indictment of Naziism which was capped with an ovation by members of the National Association of Teachers of Speech and the American Educational Theater Association, whose joint conference will close tomorrow.

"One of the greatest addresses I ever heard," commented Dr. W. Hayes Yeager, Depew professor of public speaking at George Washington University and newly elected president of the teachers' association.

Sir Willmott, who followed Senator Elbert D. Thomas, of Utah, and Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, assistant selective service director, on the platform, elicited a burst of applause with the declaration, "We should rather die than inhabit that other world (the type developed by Hitler)."

The London journalist reviewed Britain's aims to dispense with "idolatries and hypocricies that should be burned away," and live at peace. He expressed the hope that whatever peace is ultimately arrived at shall take human beings and their essential needs into consideration, as well as frontiers and politics.

Senator Thomas and Gen. Hershey described the national defense program and its legislative and conscription aspects, respectively.

Earlier in the day a preparedness note was injected into the program when Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox was made an honorary member of Tau Kappa Alpha, public-speaking honor society, for his oratorical prowess.

Ligon Girl's Death in Texas Ruled Suicide

How a 20-year-old girl, daughter of a Washington woman, turned a pistol on herself after her escort was killed during an argument and struggle over the weapon, was revealed yesterday at a hearing held in San Antonio, Tex.

Justice of the Peace O. L. Wiley, following the inquiry, ruled that Miss Jane Helen Ligon, daughter of Mrs. Rosa Belle Ligon, of 2020 Shepherd Street Northeast, was a suicide, and that her companion, Wallace Elvin Butler, 26, of San Antonio, had been slain.

On Christmas Eve, according to San Antonio police, a patrolman making the rounds of a city park, investigated the prolonged blowing of an auto horn. He found Miss Ligon wounded in a parked car. Nearby Butler lay dead.

Police quoted the girl as saying she and Butler had been friends, but had quarreled. During the controversy there was a struggle for a pistol, which police said belonged to the girl, and that Butler was fatally wounded when the gun went off. Miss Ligon then shot herself in the chest, according to police. She died Monday night.

At the Ligon home here, it was learned that Mrs. Ligon, an employe of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and a son, William, 17, immediately left for Texas on hearing of the tragedy.

Miss Ligon, a friend here disclosed yesterday, had come here on a visit several weeks ago to seek work.

Col. Roy Goes On D. C. Guard Retired List

On the eve of induction into Federal service, the District National Guard has lost another high-ranking officer in a key position, The Post learned yesterday.

Lieut. Col. Roy

Lieut. Col. William T. Roy, commanding the special troops of the Twenty-ninth Division and division provost marshal, was retired on the stroke of 1941, at his own request, after more than ten years of commissioned service. Col. Roy, who in civil life is assistant parliamentarian of the House of Representatives, said yesterday he had decided his services were more needed at present in the House than in the military forces.

"It is like losing my right arm to lose my outfit," he said. "But I felt I should put aside every consideration except that of how and where I could do the most good. One of the most important sessions of Congress in history is coming up and there seems to be no one who could immediately take my place there.

"However, I'm going to maintain my interest in the organization and attend drill on administrative nights."

Col. Roy probably will be succeeded in command of the special troops and as provost marshal of the Twenty-ninth Division by Capt. Cooper B. Rhodes, who is now attending the command and general staff school at Fort Leavenworth, Kans. At least until Capt. Rhodes returns from Leavenworth February 2, the special troops will be under command of Capt. Donald A. Falk, head of the Twenty-ninth Military Police Company.

1940 Marriage Licenses Set All-Time Record

The year 1940 left an all-time record for the issuance of marriage licenses here. The total at the close of business in the District Court clerk's office yesterday was 8,133. The highest previous year was 1936, with 7,518.

Comet Heads South to Spend New Year Below Equator

Cunningham's comet, most recently discovered of the fiery-tailed wanderers of the heavens that struck fear into the hearts of ancients, moved last night to spend the new year in the Southern Hemisphere.

The comet, discovered last September by Leland E. Cunningham, Harvard University graduate student, will remain visible to observers in the North for the first few days of 1941 before it vanishes from their view, to be seen for the first time in the South about January 6.

In the Southern Hemisphere the comet will be more clearly seen than it has been in the North, Naval Observatory astronomers said last night, as it is scheduled to continue moving slightly closer to the earth until about January 16.

Thus far, the observatory reported, the comet has not failed to move in the orbit calculated for it by its discoverer.

No naval astronomer has yet observed the comet without aid of telescope or binoculars. Observations last night were ruined by cloud and haze.

To the unaided eye the comet will appear about the brightness of a sixth magnitude star and without tail.

Observers living beyond the city limits have a chance to see it. They will find it about 7 p. m. approximately 3 degrees west and 1 degree south of Altair—at least, that was its position last night. Altair, a first-magnitude star, is to be found near the horizon and slightly north of due west.

Reserves Sail Today For Panama

Washingtonians Set To Leave on Norfolk Steamer; Neutrality Patrol on Schedule

It's "up anchor" today for the five officers and 81 men of the Third Division of Washington's Naval Reserve Battalion, Caribbean-bound for active sea duty with Uncle Sam's Panama Canal defenders.

The Division, which ranks No. 2 in efficiency among the Nation's 149 Naval Reserve units, will mobilize at 5 p. m. at the Norfolk & Washington Steamboat Co. pier, 685 Maine Avenue Southwest, laden with duffel bags.

Aboard one of the company's boats, the men will shove off at 6:30 p. m. for Norfolk, the first stop in their journey to the tropical station.

As the steamboat swings out into the Potomac the reservists will get their last view of the Capital for "a year or indefinitely," as the period of their duty is termed in the Navy Department.

The division will board the U. S. S. Nitro, Navy auxiliary vessel, tomorrow and clear immediately for Panama, where it will serve in the Fifteenth Naval District, as part of the neutrality patrol, and in defending the Canal.

Lieut. Francis S. Kirk, of Laurel, Md., who goes on leave from the Maritime Commission to command the division, reported his men "are happy at having the opportunity to bear their share of the defense effort."

"Their enthusiasm is more patriotism than the mere desire for adventure," he added. "Most of them are men with years of experience—and adventure — already behind them."

The Third is frankly envied by men of the two other Washington divisions, who have heard reports of the warm, dry weather that has come to Panama with the end of rainy season recently.

The unit is among the first in the country to be assigned aboard a combat ship, the destroyer J. Fred Talbot. Divisions previously ordered up have generally been assigned to auxiliary vessels. The honor reflects the No. 2 rank of the division, which with the First and Second Divisions, respectively ranked No. 3 and 13, this year made the Washington Battalion the country's Naval Reserve Battalion No. 1.

Besides Kirk, the division's officer personnel includes Ensign Samuel Spencer, local attorney; Ensign Vermont C. Royster, Washington correspondent of the Wall Street Journal; and Ensign Robert Hoffman, junior architect in the Bureau of Ships, Navy Department. Another ensign will be assigned from a Camden (N. J.) division.

5 Persons Injured In New Year's Eve Traffic Accidents

Five persons were injured in New Year's Eve traffic crashes in the District.

Lee Shin Wing, 50, of 507 H Street Northwest, suffered injuries of the legs and abdomen after he was struck down at Maryland Avenue and Fourteenth Street Northeast, by an auto.

Thirteen-year-old William Bladen, of Takoma Park, Md., suffered cuts and bruises when he was knocked from his bicycle at Carrol Avenue and Cedar Street by a car.

Others hurt in accidents were John Freeman, colored, 70, resident of the Home for Aged and Infirm, Blue Plains, D. C., and James Stanmore, colored, 31, of 246 Fifty-seventh Street Northeast. Freeman suffered a broken right leg while Stanmore received a compound fracture of the right leg, chest injuries and fact cuts.

U. S. Navy Cancels Spring Maneuvers

Grand fleet maneuvers of the United States Navy, usually held in the spring, will not be held in 1941, it was learned officially tonight. This is the first time in 20 years the Navy high command has decided against holding maneuvers.

The bulk of the fleet will remain in the Pacific Ocean, basing at Hawaii.

Worker Hit by Plank, Starts Year in Hospital

Peter Derose, 38, of 410 Sixth Street Northwest, was in a serious condition at Emergency Hospital last night after a plank fell on him at construction work in the 600 block of E Street Northwest.

FILM MILEAGE—Rey Scott is shown with some of the 7,000 feet of color film he brought to the Capital

Rey Scott Filmed the Burning Of Canton and Bombing of Chungking; Here to Lecture About Adventures

Rey Scott, ace photographer, was in Washington yesterday with 7,000 feet of colored film of the bombing of Chungking by the Japanese and a few tales of his own after four trips to China.

Back in 1938 he and a newspaperman went out of the city of Canton to find out where the Japanese army was. They found it, but were saved from a dive-bombing by a Japanese plane only because an American flag was painted on the roof of their auto.

When the Japanese occupied Canton in October of that year 2,000,000 natives fled the city within three days. The last to flee set the city on fire, and it burned for 40 days. Scott filmed the flight and fire, but was forbidden to leave with the films.

With one companion he escaped and traveled by foot and small boats 135 miles to Hong Kong. En route the small boat in which he was traveling was bombed by three Japanese planes for 45 minutes. "That's something even my close friends won't believe," Scott added.

On his last trip from which he returned a couple of months ago Scott made photographs of the caravan Red Route from Chungking to Russia. He also treked into Tibet making photographs for Life Magazine.

The Red Route is China's only line of communication with the outer world except for the Burma Road now, Scott pointed out. China is trading wool and hides to the Soviet for undetermined amounts of gas, oil and munitions, he said.

Last night he showed his film of the bombing of Chungking to the Chinese Ambassador. Yesterday the film was shown to War Department officials at the National Geographic Society. Shortly he starts on a lecture tour.

Capital Shouts Year Out With Weather Eye on 1941

In contrasting moods, others gathered at scores of churches for watch night rituals preceded by fellowship periods. The largest of these services was at the Congress Street Methodist Church, where churches of Georgetown joined in a union service.

At the White House the President, members of his family and a few close friends listened to a musicale.

Extra Police on Duty

Patrolling the streets of Washington were 100 extra policemen, detailed to direct traffic and keep a semblance of order around the celebration centers.

Then the clock struck.

The big noise echoed across the town for a full 25 minutes, and strangers shook hands and patted one another on the back with boisterous greetings of "Happy New Year" as a shouting mob surged about F Street. Even the starlings roosting on the eaves of nearby buildings were roused from their slumber.

There, and on other downtown streets, the roar of hundreds of automobile horns drowned out the more distant whistles of boats, trains and factories. The autos beat the gun and began their bleating two minutes before midnight, and it was 45 minutes later before their noise subsided.

A Lonsome Drum

A few firecrackers went off downtown, and one noisemaker was equipped with a large snare drum which he beat enthusiastically as he lunged through the crowds.

At indoor celebrations confetti flew, toy horns tooted and novelty noise makers crackled. The strains of "Auld Lang Syne" mingled with the din.

President Roosevelt and the White House gathering sang "Auld Lang Syne," too, and the President gave his toast—"To the United States!"

The faithful prayed at churches for peace in 1941.

As the President's gathering broke up, and the faithful left the churches, and the merrymakers of F Street headed home, the general revelling continued. It was dawn before most of the night spots were quiet.

Today the streets will be comparatively deserted, while most of the populace sleeps late.

But many Catholics will arise early to attend church services in observance of the feast of Christs' circumcision, a holy day of obligation.

Other events scheduled include the traditional New Year meeting of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants at 10:30 a. m. at the Old Union Engine House, when Chronicler John Clagett Proctor will review the year 1940.

The Central Y. M. C. A. will hold open house throughout the day, with musical programs and athletic contests. As a part of the program, New Year's addresses will be delivered over Station WMAL by Leonard W. DeGast, general Y. M. C. A. secretary; Edgar Morris, chairman of the membership promotion committee; Bill Werber, Cincinnati Red third baseman, and Lieut. Col. Thomas J. Frailey.

'Santa Fe Trail,' at the Earle, Foreshadows War Between States

Flynn, Massey and De Havilland Head An Imposing Cast; Brief Stage Revue

"SANTA FE TRAIL." Warner Brothers, picturization of an original screen play by Robert Buchner, costarring Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland and Raymond Massey, with Ronald Reagan, Alan Hale, William Lundigan, Van Heflin, Gene Reynolds, Henry O'Neill, Guinn "Big Boy" Williams, Alan Baxter, John Litel, Moroni Olsen, David Bruce, Hobart Cavanaugh, Charles D. Brown, Ward Bond, Russell Simpson, Charles Middleton, Spencer Charters, William Marshall, George Haywood and others. Directed by Michael Curtiz. At the Earle Theater.

To many the title will seem a misnomer. In "Santa Fe Trail," the Earle's New Year's screen attraction, the Santa Fe trail serves a purpose of only secondary importance as a challenge to the heroism of West Point's graduating class of 1854. The picture primarily is concerned with the fanatical career of John Brown, the flaming abolitionist, who waged a one-man rebellion against slavery as a prelude to the War Between the States. Both the genesis and the climax of the vivid story concocted by Robert Buckner as a volcanic commentary upon a critical period in American history have their locale in the East. The story begins at West Point and reaches its crux in Harpers Ferry, Md. Save for the brief interval of the picture's denouement, the Santa Fe trail never penetrates farther into the West than Kansas. For every purpose of incendiary drama, that is far enough.

BELL

Robert Buckner in this subject has contrived a peculiarly realistic effect by making the principal figures in his play characters whose names are immortalized on the pages of United States history. Liberties have been taken with both personal and historical fact, but a sound basis of fundamental truth lends "Santa Fe Trail" something more than a purely fictional impressiveness. It is, at least, pseudo-factual drama primed with every essential of superlative entertainment. It roars along from one sensational incident to another with happy oblivion to partisanship in its contemplation of an issue pregnant with bitter potentialities.

That graduating class of 1854 at West Point was packed with names destined for future celebrity. Col. Robert E. Lee was commandant of the Military Academy. Among his enrollment were J. E. B. Stuart, George Custer, Phil Sheridan, James Longstreet, George Pickett, John Hood and others whose names are enscrolled in blood upon the annals of American military glory. Jefferson Davis was the Secretary of War, who delivered the major address to the future generals of a civil conflict such as the world has seldom seen. A barracksroom feud between cadets of the North and South, leads to the detail of most of the class to service on the Santa Fe trail, the toughest assignment in the Army, as punishment for their infraction of academy rules of conduct and department becoming an officer and a gentleman. The Santa Fe trail leads directly to Kansas, where John Brown is prefixing "Bloody" to the name of the State by the uncurbed zeal of his crusade to stamp out slavery by murder, arson, pillage and revolt. Through this basic texture of the drama are woven warm strands of romance and threads of comedy that sometimes are strained almost to the breaking point. The rounded effect, however, is one of pyrotechnic drama carried off with unusual skill and high success.

Four performances dominate the action of "Santa Fe Trail." They are contributed by Errol Flynn, Raymond Massey, Ronald Reagan and Olivia de Havilland, with Van Heflin, as the renegade turncoat, who is first on one side and then on the other, crowding close for major honors. Flynn is cast as "Jeb" Stuart and Reagan as George Custer, who might have won Kit Carson Halliday de Havilland if he had made his last stand on the trail instead of on the Little Big Horn. Both make handsome figures as fiery and intrepid young officers out on the trail of their spurs. Miss de Havilland, as a Kansas tomboy, whose daddy hopes to run some steel rails along the wagon ruts in time, is, if possible, more charming than ever. But the outstanding performance of all is Raymond Massey's blazing-eyed portrayal of the God-inspired John Brown. This characterization, although its exact opposite in execution and purpose, deserves to rank with his Lincoln of Illinois days. The comedy is concentrated in the hands of Alan Hale and Guinn "Big Boy" Williams and only occasionally falls short of being funny.

Harry Anger's "Let's Go West" stage revue is a brief but buoyant effort that serves its function well. The Sons of the Purple Sage add marksmanship, rope spinning and bullwhip snapping to their musicianship and the Four Whitson Brothers offer as sensational a risley act—that is that upside down, foot-juggling business—as ever has been seen on a local stage. The rest of the goings-on is intrusted to the Roxyettes who come through in elegant fashion in two or three of their most effective routines. Altogether, if you can't find a Happy New Year at the Earle, you might as well give yourself up.

Capitol's 'Flight Command' Finds Drama in Air Defense

By Richard L. Coe

"FLIGHT COMMAND." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Commander Harvey Haislip and John Sutherland, adapted to the screen by Wells Root and Commander Haislip, starring Robert Taylor, with Ruth Hussey, Walter Pidgeon, Paul Kelly, Shepperd Strudwick, Red Skelton, Nat Pendleton, Dick Purcell, Willian Tannen, William Stelling, Stanley Smith, Addison Richards, Donald Douglas, Pat Flaherty, Forbes Murray and Marsha Hunt. Directed by Frank Borzage. Reviewed Tuesday afternoon. At the Capitol Theater.

Flying in on the tail wind of the President's defense talk of Sunday evening, "Flight Command" embodies our present preoccupation with preparedness. While its story is neither particularly original nor convincing, in an aviation picture it's the airplane shots that count and of these the Capitol's new feature has a splendid array that are always interesting and often exciting.

So it is that though Robert Taylor and a predominately male cast may be the heroes of "Flight Command," the United States Navy, Harold Rossen's camera and a sharp timeliness are what give the film its lift. Landing and taking-off from an airplane carrier in the Pacific, formation flying and the eternal barrier of fog are the true highlights of the new M.-G.-M. release.

How do the flying fighters prepare for those sky battles which barbarism is forcing on an unwilling world? It's a daring, defiant training that enables men to gauge distances and to aim in the rushing currents above the earth. How important are the Navy's ships to that force of defense which is neither of one branch of the government nor another at this critical stage? "Flight Command" will tell you that ships are of vital importance, that cooperation is essential. How about those shake-down cruises of which there are a few lines daily in the papers? They're exhausting, demanding work. this film, made with the cooperation of the Navy Department, will tell you.

Air Defense in the Raw

Against this background is told the familiar story of the ambitious kid who lands in the best squadron of them all and muffs his first critical tries only to come out on top before the fadeout. There is the heroism to which usage has accustomed the filmgoer. There are the misunderstandings which have been a root of the drama since the earliest Nativity plays of ill-fated Coventry. As story-telling, it's effective for its purpose.

Of the cast, Robert Taylor, Ruth Hussey and Walter Pidgeon form one version of the familiar triangle, a triangle that is only such because of Dame Rumor. Shepperd Strudwick, so long a familiar Theater Guild player, is particularly fine in the sympathetic role of Miss Hussey's brother, a flier who would solve the ever-present fog problem. Red Skelton, yes, that madcap of vaudeville, has one of the chief supporting roles as a wise-cracking Helicat.

But what you'll remember about "Flight Command" is its authoritative background, its timely setting, its eloquent shots of air defense in the raw.

Lucy Monroe on Stage

The Capitol stage salute to the New Year is notable chiefly for the charm of Songstress Lucy Monroe, prima donna of many a musical and radio show and lately a star of the New York Fair's "American Jubilee." Miss Monroe's voice is not a big one, but she employs the microphone with authority, sings gracefully and offers a well-chosen repertoire. Except for the inevitable Victor Herbert encore, her numbers are not too time-worn and she does them with no little style. "The Last Time I Saw Paris" and "It's a Lovely Day Tomorrow" are in her best metier.

Yesterday's first house, and a goodly, appreciative one it was, too, liked the jokes and manner of M. C. Lew Parker, whose hawk-nosed associate, Sid Gold, also is back. Collette Lyons, of the blondined hair and ungentle manner, has humor and song; Paul Sydell employs his two elegant dogs to fine advantage and Pritchard and Lord offer ballroom dances. The Rockets have three likeable numbers in this better-than-par variety bill.

For an overture, Sam Jack Kaufman and his boys transplant the dynamics of Chaikowski into the once-simple melody of Jerome Kern's "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." The boys are kept almost as busy as Sam Jack.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Dec. 31.

TRAVEL: Billy Rose and Eleanor Holm spent the Christmas holidays in Montreal. Before they left they dined with Ferenc Molnar, and invited him to come along. "We'll go first to Saratoga," said Rose, "and then go across the border" . . . "Why Saratoga?" asked Molnar, ever reluctant to wander from his hotel. "What do you do in Saratoga now?" . . . "The Saratoga baths are famous," said the Aquacade producer. "We'll take the baths" . . . "Mr. Rose," said Molnar, shaking his head, "you always want to place people in water."

LYONS

CHANCE: Capt. Kirk, naval attache at the London Embassy, and his assistant, Commander Boone, returned to America last week on the Clipper . . . when the plane left Lisbon they got into a bridge game with two Norwegian officers. Boone addressed one of them as "pard," and throughout the entire flight he called: "Nice play, pard" or "You're set two, pard." At the end of the trip Commander Boone tabulated the score, and said: "Well, you owe me 40 cents, pard" . . . "Pard" paid, returned to his chair to collect his belongings—and Boone learned that "pard" was Crown Prince Olaf of Norway.

WEALTH: When Waxey Gordon ruled the Broadway roost, backing its shows and ruling its mobs, he delighted in telling of his humble origin and of the rags-to-riches story he was playing. And when Thomas E. Dewey, then a young Federal prosecutor, convicted Waxey for neglecting to pay income taxes, the newspaper stories of Waxey's earnings employed the rags-to-riches phrase . . . His fortune now is gone, and now he's free again. But the cycle is reversed; the arc is now complete. For Waxey Gordon has a job in the remnants business—selling rags.

SPEECH: The President's broadcast was written entirely by himself. He read the drafts submitted by his advisers, discarded them all and wrote his own speech . . . An indication of how many listeners he had could be found in the empty restaurants throughout the mid-town sector. So many people stayed home to listen that the restaurants which usually are jammed for Sunday dinner were almost void of customers. And the 93 Brandt Theaters—11 of them in the Times Square sector—had the lowest attendance in their 26 years of operation.

DIGNITY: The newest field of operations for the town's practical jokers is the "Personals" column of the New York Times—to see just how far the editors will go in permitting the use of that department. Last week the Times rejected this ad from two young men who were ready to pay cash for its insertion: "Two swallows, returning to Capistrano, will share expenses with lady wishing to accompany them. References exchanged."

ENTERPRISE: More than a year ago George Givot, who billed himself as "The Greek Ambassador" in the vaudeville and radio programs which starred him, abandoned this dialect routine and announced that henceforth he would devote himself to singing. Givot returned to New York and studied with voice teachers whose reputations had been established at the Met. He has resumed his vaudeville career—in a straight singing act . . . Last week Givot was booked into a Montreal cafe. He quickly discovered how popular is the Greek cause—especially in Canada. And so now he's abandoned his singing and again became the "Greek Ambassador." Restored is the glory of Greece.

APPOINTMENT: In the New York gubernatorial campaign of 1938, when Dewey opposed Lehman, John Lord O'Brian was on the Republican ticket—opposing Jim Mead, the New Deal's candidate for the United States Senate . . . O'Brian is headed for Washington now. He's expected to become counsel to the Defense Commission.

Ginger Rogers Scores a Hit As 'Kitty Foyle' at RKO-Keith's

"KITTY FOYLE." RKO-Radio picturization of the novel by Christopher Morley, adapted to the screen by Dalton Trumbo and Donald Ogden Stewart, starring Ginger Rogers, with Dennis Morgan, James Craig, Eduardo Ciannelli, Ernest Cossart, Gladys Cooper, Odette Myrtil, Mary Treen, Katherine Stevens, Walter Kingsford, Cecil Cunningham, Nella Walker, Edward Fielding, Kay Linaker, Richard Nichols and Florence Bates. Directed by Sam Wood. Reviewed Tuesday afternoon. At RKO-Keith's Theater.

Ginger Rogers slings her saucy hat right into the middle of the ring as America's foremost competitor for Garbo's crown in "Kitty Foyle." Not that Ginger goes exotic as the redheaded Foyle girl from South Philadelphia. But she gives a wonderful and brilliantly shaded portrayal of a modern American "white collar girl"—the sort of girl who's graduated from a business school into business, always taken more or less of a beating from life, from both the material and emotional standpoints. The kind of girl who lives in a one-room apartment with two other girls, washes her one pair of silk stockings in the bathroom, can afford the movies only once a week—but is just as affluent as her richer sisters in the matter of falling head over heels in love, getting in jams and suffering like the very mischief.

"Kitty Foyle" has been read by all the people who keep up with the year's best books. In its movie version the original fine lines of Author Christopher Morley have been further enriched by the witticisms of Donald Ogden Stewart; the suspense has been built up to such a staggering point that you never guess the ending until the last two words of dialogue that tell you whether Kitty will turn into the primrose path or the narrow way of conventional virtue. The ending leaves beholders both glad and sorry. Too bad there isn't some way of lining the narrow path with primroses or vice versa.

With Ginger registering another great big step up the ladder of dramatic power, with a story combining so much of simple human value, with fine artistic development and brilliant dialogue, "Kitty Foyle" is due to stand high in 1941's picture history.

The flow of American life from the late 1920s to the late 1930s gives colorful background to the story, also the contrast between life in South Philadelphia among the poor folks and among the gilded "Main Liners" who constitute Philadelphia's Bourbons. There's a skillfully done but highly exciting sequence when the proletarian Miss Foyle meets her new husband's Main Line family, explodes in her finest "shanty Irish" manner. There are brownstone "speakeasies" of 1929 vintage, Manhattan night spots circa 1935, hysterics in beauty parlors, births in hospitals and tenements, lovemaking in a Pocono hideout, taxicabs, hotels and apartments.

Though La Rogers blossoms out as a great dramatic star in "Kitty Foyle," that elderly gentleman, Ernest Cossart, grabs every scene in which his fat face is permitted to shine. Hitherto known chiefly as the peer of movie butlers, Mr. Cossart has gone Irish on us and is the greatest old mick ever, as Kitty's father. He's highly partial to his liquor, but ever intent upon getting some sense into his daughter's flighty head. Another tremendously interesting change is that of Eduardo Ciannelli from his vitriolic gangster specialties into a comparatively harmless "speak" proprietor. Dennis Morgan, tremendously handsome, and James Craig, who's more on the dependable "nice boy" side, are Kitty's big love interests and play their roles with both ability and considerable sparkle.

Everybody's pet canine, Disney's Pluto, shows up among a ton of bubbles and a bushel of persecution. It all shows that you can't eat soap flakes without effervescent results. Also, it is one of th best of recent Disneys. The newsreel is largely devoted to a scanning of the big sports events of 1940, about the most cheerful 1940 memories to be gleaned from its news shots.—MARY HARRIS.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Dec. 31 (INS).—Ruby Keeler, whose career was such a bone of contention with Al Jolson, who wanted Ruby to forget movies, is coming back. She will sign a contract with Columbia to play one of the leading roles in "Betty Co-ed" and since she is not wanted at the studio until April, it's my guess she will then be Mrs. John Lowe, wife of a wealthy Pasadena lad. Her divorce from Jolson just became final and she receives a flat sum of $50,000 in lieu of her present alimony.

PARSONS

The vacation Merle Oberon promised herself has gone a-glimmering. She has just finished "That Uncertain Feeling" and today she checked in at Warner Brothers to start fittings for "Affectionately Yours."

Chatter in Hollywood: The rumor around town that Carole Landis will marry Franchot Tone New Year's Day was so prevalent that Twentieth Century-Fox, which has her contract, started checking. Well, Carole won't marry New Year's Day because her divorce from Willis Hunt, jr., won't be final. I printed the story she would marry Tone, but now I'm beginning to doubt my information, for Franchot was at the Hollywood Tropics with a cutie called Vivian Mason—and having himself a time. Twentieth plans to groom this Landis gal and I believe they would be greatly opposed to a marriage for her, since she just got out of one matrimonial mistake.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Bill Smith is here without his bride, Ethel Merman, but he denies all is not well with them; Marcia Crocker, Bob Taplinger's very affable secretary, and Bill Alsine took Saturday off to visit Yuma and the judge; Ann Sheridan and George Brent will hie themselves to La Quinta for New Year's Eve; Eddie Norris, Ann Sheridan's ex, and Ruth Robbins are talking marriage; Milton Berle flies East to keep a date with Joyce Mathews; Joe Cawthorne, who was so ill of a heart attack eight weeks ago that his life was despaired of, is on his feet again and Queenie Vassar, his bride of 39 years, could not be happier.

Olympe Bradna and her papa and mama will spend New Year with Douglas Wilhoite's (her fiance) family; George Murphy a flu victim in the hospital—not a very good way to spend New Year's; Laurel and Hardy, who had a very successful personal appearance tour, are starting out again in three weeks; Dennis Morgan has bought a home in the valley; Bette Davis has gone to the desert to try to put on the few pounds she always loses when she makes a picture; Mrs. Henry Fonda is not accepting any social engagements on account of she has the flu; Dean Jagger is another flu victim; Bob Stack is concentrating on Barbara Evans; a new twosome—Ricardo Cortez and Eleanor Troy—at the Florentine Gardens; Jeffrey Lynn and Dana Dale have forgotten their grievances and are together again.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

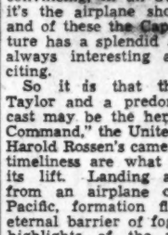
Hollywood, Dec. 31.

Happy New Year, everybody!

I like chatting with pink-cheeked Bill Herbert, of Paramount's press department, 'cause I always come away with at least one swell story. Bill was considered one of the bright writers of New York, so of course movieland wooed and won him about six years ago. It was Bill who helped me crash Jimmy Roosevelt's male cocktail party high up in Radio City, when Jimmy was making copy for Sam Goldwyn instead of himself.



HOPPER

"Back in 1928," said Bill, "the glittering speakeasy haven was Moriarty's. There, on a clear night, you could see Mike Romanoff, the poor man's poor man. (Now Mike has his own swank cafe in Beverly Hills.) Cafe Society hasn't yet formed. Radio was still a crystal set. Talkies were just beginning. The top comics in the theater were W. C. Fields, Ed Wynn, Eddie Cantor, Moran and Mack, Al Jolson, Clark and McCullough, Joe Cook and Lou Holtz

"Fresh fro' New England," Bill went on, "my first job in New York was writing balloons for comic strips. I used to dream up antics for Polly and Her Pals, and Tillie the Toiler.

"One night Charles E. Mack walked into Moriarty's and hired me to write for Moran and Mack. A year or two before, I had sat around at college, listening to records and laughing at their "goopher feathers" routines, so suddenly I was in the Big Time.

"There was a second string comic at the Hollywood Restaurant named Jack Benny, who sort of took over the lulls that Lou Holtz left after his dialect stories set the customers choking over their matzoths and dumplings. Broadway felt a tiny bit sorry for Benny. He was too smart, too sophisticated. People didn't get him. If ever a performer was marked for a final fadeout at the Old Actors' Home, with his fiddle and his dreams, it was Benny.

"By 1932, the hysterical mirth-makers like Ed Wynn and Eddie Cantor were in their prime.

"Finally Jack Benny got into an edition of the 'Vanities.' He did a scene in which he introduced a Japanese wrestler as the greatest and most invincible catch-as-catch-can foe in the world. A challenger stepped upon the stage, seized the champion and hurled him on the back of his neck. 'I'm sorry,' Benny apologized, 'I guess that Japanese must have been yellow!'

"Fred Allen arrived in 'The Little Show,' doing a different monologue every night. Hope turned up, chin and all, in 'Roberta.'

"There was something phenomenal going on. Editors found out that the comic strips with human appeal and stories were outstripping the gag variety in popularity. Producers learned that situation comedians were on the rise, and joke tellers with the wide pants and the comedy falls were on the wane. Lauren Sterne, the eighteenth century novelist, turned out quantities of humor, but managed to make sense when he wrote, 'If you would be considered wise, don't be as funny as you can.' Allen, Benny and Hope had learned the wisdom of that, if not from Sterne, from trial and error. They didn't break their necks getting laughs. They depended upon situation and wit."

Dew Wins 1940 Jockey Title as Spill Stops Taylor

G. U. Underdog, Stanford Favored Today

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

In the manner of the lovelorn, dog and bridge editors, not to mention the home and garden and diet columnists, we are asking ourselves a question today, by way of presenting ourselves with a topic.

POVICH

"Dear Mr. Povich," begins the self-authored query to this department, "Your column is the light of my life. I am a daily reader. I shall not rest easy until you discuss what the year 1941 may hold for the champions of 1940. Please do. Yours in sport, S. P."

Okay, then, if that's what you want. As we understand it, you want something like this:

BASEBALL—The National League pennant winners, the Reds, figure to repeat, but the Detroit Tigers, American League champions, don't. There isn't anything in the National League that appears able to give the Reds a contest. The Cincinnati club breezed home last season, and in Monty Pearson it has picked up a pitcher who has always been a winner. On what the rest of the league showed last year, the Reds have only one team to fear even a bit. That one is the Brooklyn Dodgers who have taken on a new battery in Kirby Higbe and Mickey Owen, but that fact isn't going to cause Jack Doyle to make the Dodgers the winter book favorites.

In the American League, the question seems to be: Which club is going to succeed the Tigers as pennant winners? Detroit, with its creaky infield and inability to make any deals, appears doomed as surely as your next breath will follow your last. The Yankees are the team that has most reason to look to 1941 with high hope. If they don't win the pennant, all signs are telling a horrible untruth.

There isn't anybody around who looks like a serious challenger for Hank Greenberg's home-run crown, but Joe DiMaggio's American League batting title isn't so secure. Ted Williams, of the Red Sox, or Luke Appling, of the White Sox, or Rip Radcliff, of the Browns, could take over DiMaggio's crown without eliciting profound surprise.

GOLF—If any golf champion, with the exception of Betty Jameson, the Texas girl who rules American women's golf, repeats in 1941 it will be an upset. Women golf champions have a way of repeating. Virginia Van Wie won the title for three straight years beginning in 1932, and Glenda Collett was a three-time title holder in 1928-29-30. Before Collett, Alexa Stirling came down in front three times.

There is no complaint with Lawson Little as the National Open champion, but he will scarcely be a favorite to repeat. Not with such pros as Byron Nelson, Sam Snead, Ralph Guldahl, Ben Hogan and Ed Oliver in the Open field. Anyway, only two Open champions have repeated in the last 28 years.

The same uncertainties of golf threaten Byron Nelson's continued reign as the P. G. A. champion. He'll have to beat the same terrific opposition that will confront Little in the Open. Only one P. G. A. champ, Denny Shute, has won the title two years handrunning since 1929.

And Dick Chapman's amateur crown also rests uneasy. It will be that way as long as Bud Ward, the Spokane amateur is in the field. Chapman was an easy winner last year, but before that he had been no ball of fire on the links.

FOOTBALL—The best bet to prolong their reign among the 1940 football champions are the Chicago Bears. They're tops in the pro league, or do we need remind you of that 73-0 affair that befell the Redskins on December 8. The Bears will scarcely be a weaker club next year, what with having first claim on Tommy Harmon. If there is a new Eastern Division champion, it will probably be the Brooklyn Dodgers replacing the Redskins.

Minnesota and Stanford are good bets to rule the college roost when 1941 fades out. Minnesota is always a team to be reckoned with and out at Stanford Clark Shaughnessy loses few of his unbeaten, untied 1940 squad. The team that is apt to fade rapidly is, sorry to relate, Georgetown, where Jack Hagerty will tearfully see 16 of his seniors graduate in June.

TENNIS—This sport figures to produce a wild scramble for both the men's and women's championship. With Alice Marble having turned pro, the women's field is wide open and Helen Jacobs can, conceivably, win back the crown she lost to Marble during these last four years. If she does, it will be a sad commentary on the state of women's tennis because La Jacobs long ago began her decline as a potent tennist.

The fact that Don McNeill is the 1940 men's champion will increase the competition for that title. McNeill's soft game does not exactly awe the current tennis crop and it is apt to bring out of hiding tennis players who always considered themselves licked when Don Budge was in a title field.

RACING—1941 could be the year for both Challedon and Bimelech. Challedon is still far and away the best horse in the land as his five stake victories and his Horse of the Year award in 1940 attested, and unless they weight him down with the worries of Churchill, he'll probably take the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap in March. Bimelech couldn't withstand the rigors of training as a 3-year-old after winning the Preakness and the Belmont and was retired, but he is being freshened up in Florida and may yet prove his greatness.

40,000 to See Hoyas Play In Miami's Orange Bowl

Mississippi State's Power, Speed Pitted Against Georgetown's Deception, Weight

By Jack Munhall

Post Staff Writer

Miami Beach, Fla., Dec. 31.—It'll be North against South, deception against power and weight against speed here tomorrow when Georgetown University's underdog eleven meets Mississippi State in the Orange Bowl before a record crowd of 40,000 fans.

Georgetown, though boasting a seven-pound advantage in the line, 200 to 193, a 15-pound edge in the backfield, 187 to 172, and statistically better offensive and defensive records, will enter this, the most important football game in its history, as a decided short ender.

On the eve of a battle which will contrast Georgetown's wholly Northern squad and tricky modified pro attack with Mississippi State's predominantly Southern team and Tennessee offensive system the odds layers were favoring the Maroons at anywhere from 6-5 to 8½-5.

An ever-increasing influx of Georgetown supporters, including such wealthy rooters as Walter O. Briggs, owner of the Detroit Tigers, is expected to reduce the odds to even money before kick-off time. However, the Georgetown team, to the last player, seized upon the 8½-5 quotation and many of them planked down their last five bucks as evidence of their confidence of producing an upset which will establish them among the country's outstanding five elevens.

Hoyas Bet on Selves

It is this selfsame spirit of the Georgetown players which has prompted many an expert to hesitate picking against them. Keyed to a pitch nearly as pronounced as their frenzy before their titantic struggle with Boston College, the eleven seniors who will start tomorrow for Georgetown can see only one result, unless all the breaks of the game go the other way.

In those very words did Jules Koshlap, mainspring of the Georgetown backfield, and Lou Ghecas, his fleet running mate at halfback, sum up their prediction.

Koshlap, revealing that every player on the squad had bet on Georgetown as heavily as his means would allow, said the team was as fully determined to beat Mississippi State as it was to lick Boston College and would "unless every break goes against us as it did in the B. C. game."

Koshlap also hinted that Georgetown would be definitely air-minded in its attack against a Mississippi State line that was powerful enough to blank such strong offensive teams as Ole Miss (19-0) and Alabama (13-0). Fullback Jim Castiglia, whose backfield efforts have been confined almost exclusively to line bucking; Frank Dornfeld, the talented sophomore triple threater, and Lefthanded Benny Bulvin are ex-

The End of Jockey Taylor's Bid for National Saddle Title

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

On the final day of his duel with Jockey Earl Dew, Jockey Walter Lee Taylor was thrown to the turf when a stirrup broke after yesterday's fourth race. The Texas boy suffered a leg injury that forced him to cancel his remaining mounts. Taylor is shown above after he had been carried to the infield to await the arrival of the ambulance

Title to Dew; Taylor Falls, Injures Leg

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Dec. 31.—An injury to Walter Lee Taylor put a dramatic eleventh-hour end today to the most sensational race in turf history for the year's jockey championship.

Earl Dew, of Sac City, Iowa, galloped home in the first race at Santa Anita with his 287th triumph of 1940 to break a tie with Taylor, who a few minutes before had fallen from a mount at Tropical Park.

A fighter to the end, Taylor refused to remain in a hospital and rode back to the track in an ambulance with the announced intention of returning to the saddle.

But he found his thigh injury too much of a handicap and cancelled his final two mounts.

Stirrup Breaks

A broken stirrup ruined Taylor's hopes. He was astride the filly Town Miss in the fourth race and had crossed the finish line in last place when the mishap occurred.

Taylor lost his balance and slipped heavily to the turf. He apparently was kicked in the thigh.

A chain of events had built the duel, carried on this week at a

Vols Rated Edge Over B. C. in Sugar Bowl

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Dec. 31.—'Twas the night before New Year's and there was a distinct belief among the half-million residents and almost 50,000 visitors in Sugar Bowl Town that Tennessee's Vols would beat Boston College's Eagles tomorrow in a football game filled with all the tricks two master grid magicians could pull out of a headguard.

The setup was this:

The two highest scoring teams in the country, both primed and raring to go, each with an attack strong in all departments, and each known to be drilled in many plays seldom or never seen on the gridiron.

73,000 to Witness

To witness this struggle, 73,000 spectators have long since bought up all the space in Tulane Stadium. The game will start at 1:15 p. m. (Central standard time) after an hour or more of pageantry featured by the maneuvering of the Bengal Guards, drill team composed of beautiful school girls from Orange, Tex.

Local betting establishments were asking Tennessee backers to lay down $5 on the chance of winning $2, but Bostonians wagering $5 will win $9 if their team comes through.

A prediction of occasional showers slightly dampened hopes of the Bostons who depend more upon passes than do the Southerners. However, it was conceded that nothing short of storm or flood could prevent both teams from going all out with every weapon known to the game.

Reserves Better

The Eagles depend almost entirely upon Charlie O'Rourke, Mike Halovak, Frank Maznicki and Hank Toczylowski to carry the offensive burden while the Vols have three topflight tailbacks and at least a couple of good boys at all other positions.

Some sports writers, nevertheless, favored the Eagles, impressed with their exuberant spirits and fine physical condition. Supporting this view was the opinion that the Tennesseans, undefeated in three seasons and playing in their third bowl game, might be overconfident and a little shy on prime condition

East Favored Today Over West Squad

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Dec. 31.—A listless Eastern squad, including some of the most fearsome names in 1940 football, was a slight favorite today t owin the sixteenth East-West football game in Kezar Stadium tomorrow before a capacity crowd of 62,000.

Odds on the brilliant Eastern aggregation dwindled from 2½ to 1 a week ago to 10 to 8 as runners of dissension followed unimpressive workouts in the Eastern camp.

In contrast the Western squad had worked out hard and harmoniously. The Westerners were not so famous nor so fast, but they were just as tough and bruising, and a little bit bigger.

It was the names of the brilliant array of talent from the East, including Michigan's Tom Harmon and Forest Evashevaski, and Penn's Frank Reagan, that sold out every seat in Kezar Stadium more than ten days ago. If headline names alone would win the game, the East would be a cinch, but the West is no pushover. It, too, was made up of outstanding college stars and they appeared to be in better condition than the Easterners, in better spirit, and they averaged out on a tonage basis at 203 pounds per man to 196 for the East.

The charity game will be a battle of bruisers that will help the crippled children in Shrine Hospital here walk again, with coaches Babe Hollingbery and Matty Bell pitting the weight and will of the West against the array of speed and names to conjure with lined up by Coaches Andy Kerr and Bernie Bierman.

Nebraska Out for Upset In Rose Bowl 'Main Event'

26th Annual Gridiron Classic in Pasadena To Draw 100,000; Fair Weather Seen

By Robert Myers

Associated Press Sports Writer.

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 31.—The hopes and dreams of two finely matched football teams and thousand upon thousand of loyal followers mounted tonight as the hour drew near for the clash between Nebraska and Stanford in the twenty-sixth consecutive postseason classic in the Rose Bowl.

Fair weather was promised. The big stadium, its turf a little soggy from recent rains, was ready to receive its annual full house—something like 100,000 persons.

Nebraska's determined Cornhuskers want to win this game more than any other. The university is winding up a year long celebration of 50 years of football.

Beaten by Minnesota

Stanford, the Cinderella team of the West, undefeated champions of the Pacific Coast Conference and still favored to triumph, goes into a golden anniversary celebration at midnight tonight.

The Husker 1940 record bears one smirch. They fell before mighty Minnesota, but went on to defeat Indiana, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Iowa, Pittsburgh, Iowa State and Kansas State and capture their ninth Big Six Conference title in 13 years of play.

Standford, with Coach Clark Shaughnessy taking over the reins for the first time after a disastrous 1939 campaign, rose from rags to riches and bowled over San Francisco University, Oregon, Santa Clara, Washington State, Southern California, Washington, U. C. L. A., Oregon State and California.

Hold Weight Edge

The Indians ran up 175 points; their opponents, 72. Nebraska scored 170 points and held the enemy to 54.

Stanford's backfield, guided by All-America Quarterback Frankie Albert, boasts speed and a dangerous passing attack based on Shaughnessy's now famed T-formation style of play. It generally is

Bill Knickerbocker Traded by Yankees

Chicago, Dec. 31 (AP).—The Chicago White Sox announced today the straight exchange of Catcher Ken Silvestri to the New York Yankees for Bill Knickerbocker, veteran utility infielder.

Silvestri, 24, hit .250 in 28 games for the White Sox last season. Knickerbocker, 29 years old, got into 45 games for the Yanks in 1940, batting .242.

Clyde Shugart Becomes Fifth Redskin to Sign '41 Contract

Clyde Shugart, 215-pound lineman, yesterday became the fifth veteran to sign his Redskin contract for 1941, General Manager Jack Espey announced.

Shugart, who now lives in Arlington, Va., was an All-Big Six tackle at Iowa State, has played two years with the Redskins, teaming with Clem Stralka in the second and fourth-period line at guard.

Noted for his endurance, the rugged Iowan backed up the line on defense. He is 24 years old and is expecting a new addition to his family soon.

Already under contract are Veterans Frank Filchock, Mickey Parks, Dick Farman and Andy Farkas.

Meanwhile, Redskin bosses will keep eyes and ears attuned to three different "bowl" games today to follow progress of 1941 draftees—Pasadena, Miami, New Orleans, San Francisco and far-away Hawaii. Here's the lineup of what nine of the Redskin draftees will be doing today:

Forest Evashevski, Michigan back and No. 1 draftee, with East.

Fred Davis, Alabama tackle and No. 2 draftee, with East.

James Stuart, Oregon tackle and No. 3 draftee, with West.

Ed Cifers, Tennessee end and No. 4 draftee, with Tennessee in Sugar Bowl.

Jack Banta, Southern California back and No. 10 draftee, with West.

Dewart Tornell, back, and Morris Buckingham, center, will be playing with San Jose State in Pineapple Bowl in Hawaii. Tornell was No. 12 and Buckingham No. 13 on draft list.

Earl Fullilove, Georgetown tackle and No. 17 on draft, with Georgetown in Orange Bowl.

Elmer Gentry, Tulsa back and No. 20 on draft, with West (quarterback).

G. U. Co-Captains Swap Congratulations in Miami

Coaches Planning Shakeup in Collegiate Sports Picture

U. S. Coaches Whip Out 'Big Stick'

Princeton's Gauss In Startling Speech Asks for Abolishment Of Old Sport Bodies

By Sid Feder
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Dec. 31.—Although everyone tried to keep it a secret for some reason or other, the heads of college athletics in this country whipped out the "big stick" today and took several steps apparently designed to clean up the collegiate sports picture, particularly football.

They waited until this final day of the three-day convention of the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the American Football Coaches Association to start popping the fireworks, but when they finally did, the impression was created that a shake-up of considerable proportion was promised, despite the efforts of all concerned to knock down the implication.

While talk, but no action, still went the rounds concerning various coaching vacancies, there were new indications that Paul Brown, of Massillon (Ohio) High School, was definitely slated for Ohio State and Tuss McLaughrey, of Brown, was on the way to Dartmouth.

Startling Charges

Dean Christian Gauss, chairman of Princeton University's council on athletics, in a startling speech on college football, declared in many places today "the teams have no more relation to the college than the Cincinnati Reds have to the school system of Cincinnati." Speaking to athletic directors and faculty representatives, he urged the abolishment of the old athletic associations in the interest of "progress," on the theory that they "no longer perform any useful function," and he suggested that athletics in every college become a department in that college, solely under the control of the institution itself. Pointing a finger at subsidizing practices, he brought knowing looks and grins when he said "we all know that every first-rate scholastic athlete today gets invitations to at least six or seven colleges, with "no questions asked and all expenses paid."

The N. C. A. A. amended that section of its constitution dealing with termination of memberships, and adopted a rule by which not only a school could be booted out of the organization for failure to maintain "acceptable" athletic standards, but also that the entire conference to which a school belongs would be liable to expulsion.

Finishing up the business portions of their meetings, the football coaches advanced H. O. (Fritz) Crisler, Michigan's pilot to the presidency of their organization, and the N. C. A. A. elected Prof. Phillip Badger, of New York University, its president. Detroit was picked as the 1941 convention site, with the last week in December as the likely date.

The N. C. A. A. also voted in favor of revamping the United States' set-upf or international athletics by changing the American Olympic Association to a UNITED STATES OF AMERICA SPORTS FEDERATION. This outfit would name an Olympic organization to handle this country's organization on Olympic years, and another committee to take charge of United States participation in Pan-American games. Action on the Pan-American games proposed for the Argentine in November, 1942, was delayed.

Jockey Dew Wins Title; Taylor Hurt

3,000 mile range, to one of the year's most spectacular sorts stories.

When Tropical Park opened December 20, Dew had ridden 280 winners to 270 for Taylor. The Houston lad had a run of good mounts and soon cut the edge down.

As the tension increased the two riders got into a fist fight in the jockey quarters. They were parted before either was hurt.

Dissatisfied with his progress, Dew made a sudden decision last week to fly to California to try for better luck at Santa Anita and Golden Gate Parks and to make use of the long 14-race event at Agua Caliente, Mexico, Sunday.

As he winged Westward, Taylor jumped into the lead. Dew went back into a tie by riding two winners at Caliente. Each was victorious in one race yesterday and so they came to the final day all even.

Taylor had ridden two mounts in early races today without finishing better than third.

Just how Taylor would have fared had he returned to the saddle for the last race will never be known but the fact remains that the horse he was scheduled to ride was the official winner. Merrily San was first to cross the wire, a head in front of Red Rogue, the horse Taylor was supposed to have ridden. Jockey Irving Anderson, who substituted for Taylor, claimed a foul which was allowed and Red Rogue's number was moved into the winner's position. Red Rogue paid $9.30.

'I'd Just as Soon Have Tie,' Says Dew

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 31 (AP).—Jockey Earl Dew took Subdeb to the post in the first race at Santa Anita Park here and piloted the sprightly 2-year-old filly to victory in a photo-finish with Bukhara II and Wee Biddy, ridden by D. Madden and Johnny Adams.

The triumph was No. 287 for the Sac City, Iowa, lad, who was the son of a horseman and born to the saddle, and gave him the 1940 crown.

Dew was told of Taylor's accident before he went postward in the first race. The Iowa youth said:

"Gee, that's too darn bad. I wanted him to ride today. If I should have the winner now I'd sort of hate to win the championship that way. I'd just as soon have a tie."

Two-dollar mutuels paid—COUNTRY, $6.50, $4.00, $2.80; FLYING PLAID, $11.40, $6.60; FANTASTICAL, $3.40.

COUNTRY, outrun the opening half mile, moved up with determination on the extreme outside and wore the leaders down in the last 70 yards. FLYING PLAID, a factor from the start, outgamed FANTASTICAL when the real test came. The latter, quickest to begin, showed the most speed, but hung right at the end.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The New Year's Eve. For 2-year-olds. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:32½. Off 3:33½. Winner, F. J. Buchanan's dk. b. c. (2), by Zacaweista—Epitine. Trained by J. W. Healy. Value to winner, $700; second, $180; third, $90; fourth, $30. Time, 1:11⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ZACATINE, $3.80, $2.80, $2.50; AIR BRIGADE, $14.40, $6.50; SHORTENING, $3.30.

ZACATINE, rated in front until straightened into stretch, opened up a winning lead at his leisure. AIR BRIGADE responded gamely to punishment and disposed of the others. SHORTENING saved much ground and finished stoutly.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,200; allowances. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:01. Off 4:01½. Winner, River Divide Farm's b. g. (6), by Insco—Top Lady. Trained by R. T. Shepp. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:44⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HIGH FIDELITY, $5.30, $3.20, $2.80; ALHALON, $4.40, $3.60; SIRASIA, $6.50.

HIGH FIDELITY, a trailer for 5 furlongs, moved up fast while circling the field the remainder of the trip and wore ALHALON down in the final strides. ALHALON, close up all the way, drew away around the lower turn, but was unable to withstand the winner's bid. SIRASIA, prominent all the way, was easily best of the others.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:30. Off 4:31½. Winner, F. J. Buchanan's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—HIGHSCOPE, $12.00, $8.10, $5.00; CEASE FIRE, $13.90, $8.00; JOHN'S HEIR, $4.40.

HIGHSCOPE, forcing a steady pace from the start, raced ROAR into defeat and continuing courageously, outlasted CEASE FIRE in the final drive. CEASE FIRE gradually bettered his position the last quarter mile and was wearing the winner down at the end. JOHN'S HEIR, hard urged all the way, closed strongest of all.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:00. Off 5:00. Winner, E. Douman's br. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DREAM BOAT, $6.30, $4.00, $3.60; JELWELL, $13.10, $8.20; AL AU FEU, $10.40.

DREAM BOAT, under restraint until well around the lower turn, moved up gamely on the outside, wore the leaders down and won going away. JELWELL, always prominent, held on tenaciously in the final drive. AL AU FEU came from a long ways back and finished with a rush on the outside.

EIGHTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:29. Off 5:29½. Winner, O. R. †Disqualified.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—RED ROGUE, $9.30, $5.20, $4.10; VOILEE II, $8.90, $7.00; WHITE HOPE, $6.50.

MERRILY SAN, forwardly placed, made his move leaving the quarter pole, but had VOILEE II in tight quarters through the stretch and held RED ROGUE safe at the end. However, he was disqualified. RED ROGUE, slow to settle in this stride, improved his position leaving the half-mile pole and just failed to get up. VOILEE II forced the early pace and might have finished closer up but for suffering interference. WHITE HOPE had no excuses.

N. Y. Horse Show Sends Red Cross $10,000

New York, Dec. 31 (AP).—A check for $10,000, representing the proceeds of the National Horse Show at Madison Square Garden in November and an extra sum voted by the board of directors, today was mailed to the American Red Cross at Washington by Jansen Noyes, treasurer of the National Horse Show Association.

Selections at Tropical Park.

Dear Al,

Happy New Year! Here's what I hope 1941 brings: To Owner W. L. Brann—A Kentucky Derby winner, because I like to see a good man have good horses. To Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt—Some good weather for the Preakness and Pimlico Special, because he tries to put on the best show for the public. To Clymene — A couple of victories right at the start of the small track season, because if she fails she may not eat. To Art Brown—More days at the track, because we can't always check on what he does with the horses when he stays in town. To Jockey Walter Lee Taylor—Plenty of good mounts, because he is a game, trying kid. To John A. Manfuso—A 2-year-old champion, because the Washington owner still smiles after more reverses than a car in the hands of a parking attendant. To "Jockey No Boy" Jacobs—Some good, because he "ain't been doing no good" too long. To Alan Clarke—A crystal ball, because he hasn't been so good at predicting when those Mowlee horses are going to win. To Pork Chops—A chance to make the half-mile circuit again, because we certainly missed the little colored boy. To Jockey Danny Scocca—A big season because, he and his lovely wife keep smiling when things aren't so good. To Humphrey Finney—More and more knowledge of horses and such, because when I want to know something I'm a cinch to call him up. To Thomas T. Mott—Plenty of fox to chase, because he can catch me if he wants to but he hasn't, if you know what I mean. To Rusell Oakes—More of that excellent publicity copy, because it makes the life of a racing writer easier. To Donald Hay—Direction of the mutuel departments at more tracks, because he's tops at the job. To Pete Marshall—Plenty of nothing, because he rooted for Dew to beat out Taylor. To Clocker Mike—A ring for his nose, because I can never find him when I want him. To all Benningites—Some winners, because I've been slipping lately. BILL.

First race—Cantovina appears to have the edge over those gathered for the day's opener. Has the speed and likes the route. Cruising has operated with success in other years and is ready for a good, hard effort. Mixwell to take care of the show end.

Second race—Lewistown shapes up as a fair bet in this company. Conditions seem to suit and I'm going to string along. He Man has plenty of punch and is not too ambitiously placed. Starlike fits well in the company and will be ready if the top pair make mistakes.

Third race—Whiskolo turned in a promising effort last out and needs only to improve slightly to defeat this company. Wise Decision has a bit of class and should be a keen contender. Lady Orchid appears capable of holding the others safe.

Fourth race—Royal Robes gets my call in this rather open affair. Has worked well and races have been encouraging. Rogers Boy has that recent smashing race as a recommendation. Here Again is in good hands and is a money probability.

Fifth race—Dolly Val appears to be rounding into best shape. Likes this track and will be ready to do a lot of running. No Sir has been going about trials in a business-like fashion and will be a keen factor. Close To has come a long way since being claimed in Maryland and is dangerous.

Sixth race—Bess B. is not overmatched in this field. She has speed and promises to show it in company of this caliber. I see no reason for mistakes. Open Door and Pit Terrier are formidable members of the group and should be close.

Seventh race—Josie's Pal finds a route that seems to suit. Another good worker and I'm going to take my chances with this plater. Anti Air deserves respect in a test of this kind.. Ebony Boy for the minor award.

Eighth Race—Grand Lama and Pick Out seems to be a close fit in the order named. Sweet Adeline probably will be the third one.

Best Bet—Whiskolo.

Men's District League: No. 11

Galt Davis' Rosslyn Rollers

(Note: This is the eleventh of 12 pictures showing the members of Washington's fastest duckpin loop, the Men's District League. Many of the District Leaguers are ranked as the best duckpin bowlers in the country and as such are recognized by the National Duck Pin Bowling Congress, Washington.)

FRED LITCHFIELD: He is better known as "Whip," was on the old Occidental team a number of years ago; has 122 average; is a "wrong foot" bowler and Galt Davis says Whip is about best unorthodox bowler in the country; also bowls in Rosslyn Independent League; is married; the sparkplug of the team.

FRANCIS ROBERTSON: This is his first year in the District loop where he has 120 average; also rolls in Rosslyn Independent; has extremely fast ball which he rolls with a side delivery; is married; pleasing personality and very well liked.

BILL KRAUS: Bill is captain of the team and one of the finest fellows in bowling; comes of a bowling family as there are several brothers and a sister, Isobel Riefenberg, who are stars; been bowling since the old Occidental days; has 125 average in Men's District; last year battled "Pappy" Astor Clarke most of season for high average and finished with 128; ranked fourth in U. S. in 1936-37 and was on honor roll last year; has rolled a 455 set in Men's District loop this season, dividing top honors with Tony Santini; works at Pepco.

GEORGE CLARK: This is George's first year in the fast loop; he also rolls in Rosslyn Independent and Georgetown Commercial Leagues; has a 121 average in District League; is married; has splendid bowling form; is a brick contractor.

KARL GOCHENOUR: The only member of last year's champion team which had a 629 average, a record; Karl's average currently is 123; also bowls in Rosslyn Independent loop; is married and his wife is a member of Galt Davis' Ladies District quintet; Karl is known as a "spot" bowler—doesn't look at pins when rolling, but picks the spot corresponding at the foul line on which the pin is standing and then rolls a straight ball starting from there; his average tells of his success; Karl is greatly feared in tournaments and is particularly good at bringing back the bacon from Baltimore events.

Stanford Favored In Rose Bowl Game

rated an edge over the Husker backs—which might be erroneous.

Nebraska may have the better line. Warren Alfson, right guard, was All-America, but several others alongside him pressed hard for equal recognition. As a team, the Huskers hold a slight advantage in weight, and with eight seniors and three juniors on the starting eleven, as compared to Stanford's three seniors, four juniors and four sophomore linemen, packs a more experienced club.

Eddie Schwartzkopf, the Husker left guard and a slashing defensive man, remained a doubtful quantity from the flu today, but it is highly possible he will be in at the opening whistle. Stanford's second string fullback, Milt Vucinich, a valuable replacement, is much less likely to play.

Rainy Weather Muscles In on Cotton Bowl Game Today

Fordham's Rams Ready; Aggies' Guard Robnett Loses Sleep

By the Associated Press

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 31.—Dreary, wet weather muscled in on the Cotton Bowl classic tonight and the weathermen predicted that Fordham and the Texas Aggies, two of the Nation's top once-beaten teams, would have the same setting at game time tomorrow.

Rain fell in a light drizzle. The official forecast for tomorrow was occasional rain, mostly cloudy and unsettled.

On the eve of the game the Aggies reported what could be a casualty of catastrophic proportions—Guard Marshall Foch Robnett, blond terror of the stout line that rates as the Nation's best, defensively.

Coach Homer Norton said that Robnett "had a bad night and lost many hours of sleep, but unless he develops fever and is much worse, he will start the game."

Rahn May Start

If Robnett falls out, Leon Rahn, a rowdy senior who has played enough to letter, will start.

Word seeped out of another development, however, that might offset Robnett's possible absence. Coach Norton admitted that Big Jim Thomason, the magnificent blocking back who has worked up front of Jarrin' John Kimbrough for three varsity seasons, probably would be shifted over to the ball carrying department—"for awhile, at least."

Far back in the season, in the Texas Christian game, the Aggies tried this experiment. Bow-legged, castiron Thomason, the man who made Kimbrough, stepped into the offensive game with a bang that produced two touchdowns.

Ran Very Wild

In that T. C. U. game he ran wild for an average of 7.3 yards per carry, caught two touchdown passes and generally befuddled a Christian team that had molded a defense for Kimbrough.

"Don't be surprised if you see Thomason anywhere tomorrow," smiled Norton.

Neither Norton nor Coach Jim Crowley of Fordham would make outright forecasts, but Norton admitted it would take "two, probably three, touchdowns to win" and Crowley added "We think we have a chance."

Claude Pieculiewicz, the Fordham second string quarterback who was injured Sunday when thrown from a horse, was released from the hospital today and probably will be available for brief service.

Leading the Tennessee delegation of some 10,000 rooters was Gov. Prentice Cooper, who predicted a Volunteer victory by two touchdowns. Mayor Maurice J. Tobin, of Boston, arrived today with 2,000 of his townsmen, joining thousands already here, and his forecast was Boston College 21, Tennessee 7.

The coaches are less optimistic. Zach one, Bob Neyland, of Tennessee, and Frank Leahy, of Boston, has called the other team the best in the country. Neither would predict the outcome.

Both teams will come into New Orleans tomorrow morning from their training quarters on the near-by Gulf coast.

Although the Tennesseeans have claimed a substantial disadvantage in weight, official figures from the two schools reveals the Vol line-up will average 191 pounds to 193 for Boston. The Eagles' line average is greater, 202 to 196, and the Vols have the edge in the backfield, 184 to 178.

Cavaliers, Ready for 20th Season, Schedule 7 Meets; V. P. I., Maryland, Army, Florida To Come to Charlottesville; Open Jan. 18

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 31.—Candidates for the University of Virginia's 1941 boxing team reported today for the first full squad practice in preparation for the Cavaliers' twentieth season of intercollegiate competition.

The usual seven-meet schedule opens with Virginia Tech here January 18, followed in order by North Carolina, Maryland, Navy, Army, Syracuse and Florida.

Florida, a long standing rival, returns to the schedule after a year's absence to replace Penn State for the only change in last year's list of opponents. The Gators, along with Virginia Tech, Maryland and Army, form the home phase of the schedule.

Al York, successor to Johnny LaRowe, whose death shortly after the close of the 1940 season ended his coaching tenure dating from the start of boxing here as an intercollegiate sport in 1922, faces a major rebuilding operation in his first season as head coach.

The only returning regulars are Capt. Fenton Somerville, two-year veteran in the 165-pound class, and Joe Block, 120 pounds, and Kenneth Rathbun, 175 pounds, the undefeated sophomores of last year.

Principal losses are Truman Southall, 155-pounder, and Dick Williams, 145-pounder, and the 1940 seniors, and Arthur Lipkint, 127 pounds, and Peter Coy, 135 pounds, both sophomores last year, who withdrew from school. Coy, the most promising lightweight since Bobby Goldstein finished in 1933, is working for a commission in the Naval Reserve.

Except for Clarence Callahan, who has had some varsity meet experience in the 127-pound class; Alex Wells and John Carruth, who substituted in the 145-pound division last year, and Peter Berkey, a prospect for the 155-pound class as a junior squad member, competition for the five vacancies will come from sophomores.

January 18, Virginia Tech at Charlottesville; 25, North Carolina at Chapel Hill. February 1, Maryland at Charlottesville; 8, Navy at Annapolis; 15, Army at Charlottesville; 22, Syracuse at Syracuse; 27, Florida at Charlottesville.

Hatters Seek To Clinch Title This Afternoon

An opportunity to clinch the Heurich Amateur Basketball League's first half championship awaits the Adam Hatters this afternoon when they meet the Petworth Athletic Club in the 2 o'clock feature of a basketball tripleheader at Heurich gymnasium.

Regal Clothiers are to play the Jewish Community Center at 3 o'clock and Delaware & Hudson faces the Arlington Maccabees an hour later.

The Mad Hatters, who have swept their ten games in Heurich League competition thus far, will be handicapped as Pop Berry, one of their key men, has a lame knee and Murrell Heddings, who is pacing the league's scorers with 162 points, was knocked out and shaken up in a game last Monday night.

The Petworth A. C. has shown steady improvement in recent contests and admittedly has been gunning for the league leaders.

Joey Spangler Signed to Fight Bill McDowell

Richmonder to Appear In Eight-Rounder Tuesday at Arena

Joey Spangler, Richmond's hard-hitting welterweight who recently stole the show at Turner's Arena with a rousing victory over Phillip Norman, New York scrapper, yesterday was booked for an 8-rounder against Wild Bill McDowell, of Texas, on the All-Star fistic show at the enlarged arena next Tuesday night.

Spangler, former Virginia State's Golden Gloves champion, has piled up nine victories in his comeback parade.

For McDowell it will be his first local match since his loss to Holman Williams at the stadium last summer. But since that setback the Texan has been making good in Eastern rings.

In matching Spangler against McDowell, Matchmaker Gabe Menendez brought to three the number of bouts already closed out.

Phil Furr, Washington welterweight, is drilling away as he never drilled before for his 8-rounder with Gene Molnar, of Detroit, conqueror of Steve Belloise, while Jimmy Webb will engage Al Stephany, New York colored fighter.

Matchmaker Menendez plans to close out for another 8-rounder in which Billy Banks, the flashy local colored boy, seeking to redeem himself for his loss at the hands of Joey Archibald, will display his wares again.

Menendez hopes to get Webb into town a few days ahead of time that the public might get a peek at the lad who may be the next world's champion.

Old Line Five Prepares for Penn and Duke

Given a brief breathing spell by the holidays, during which they probably had difficulty forgetting past revenges, Maryland University athletes get back into harness tomorrow when basketball and boxing squads meet for drills.

The basketers, beaten by a trio of uncertain foes before Christmas, have two games scheduled next week with powerful opponents—Pennsylvania U. at Philadelphia and Duke at College Park. The first will take place Wednesday and the second Saturday.

The boxing squad, on even more dangerous ground than terp football and basketball teams this term, undertakes its first workout in preparation for an opener with South Carolina next Saturday. Action will be in conjunction with the Terp-Duke cage game.

Only two lettermen are left to the Terrapin slug team—Izzy Alperstein, 145, and George Pyles, 165—and this will eliminate the possibility of Coach Mike Lombardo announcing his line-up until a few days before the meet. Several good prospects are on hand, but as yet no heavyweight has shown up.

Meanwhile Maryland freshmen cagers are preparing for their first game of the year, a meeting with Central High at College Park this Friday. Its yearling cagemen are about the only thing Maryland is happy about this year, and much interest is expected to follow them.

Dukes Beat Santa Clara

Pittsburgh, Dec. 31 (AP).—Unbeaten Duquesne chalked up its fourth straight basketball victory tonight, squeezing out a 42-40 edge over Santa Clara before 1,500 fans. With each team scoring 17 field goals, the game was won on the foul line, the Dukes making good on eight free throws to Santa Clara's six. Although the final tally was close, the Dukes had managed to lead almost all the way.

Huge Center Joins Brewer Five Tonight

Bollerman to Play With Locals Against Jewels at Riverside

A newly-signed 6-foot-6-inch 240-pound center will make his debut with Chris Heurich's Brewers tonight when they entertain the second-place New York Jewels in an American Basketball League game at Riverside Stadium at 9:30 o'clock.

After several hours of dickering yesterday Coach Mack Posnack, of the Brewers, announced the signing of Howie Bollerman, formerly of the Brooklyn Visitations and Baltimore Clippers and originally an All-America at Colgate University.

Bollerman, currently head coach of basketball and a faculty member at Hackensack (N. J.) High School, will be remembered by many as the player who captained Hackensack High's great club to a stunning upset over Passaic High School's internationally celebrated Wonder Five of the 1920's.

Bollerman, who retired from professional basketball at the termination of last season, at first balked when offered a contract by his old friend, Posnack, yesterday. He reconsidered upon Posnack's request, however, and reports here immediately.

Sponsor Chris Heurich, jr., who has been interested in Bollerman for the past two years, readily endorsed the signing of the former Visitation star when he was found available. Heurich admitted an interest in Bollerman two years ago and again late last season, and was gratified over the opportunity of signing the former Clipper to replace Mike Bloom, whom the Brewers recently sold outright to the Baltimore Club.

The signing of Bollerman offsets, in some measure, the disappointment of the Brewers in their ability to sign John Pelkington, giant center of the Akron Goodyears, after meeting Pelkington's own terms recently.

"Bollerman is one of the smartest centers in American League history and is a big man who handles himself well." Posnack declared yesterday. "He also is a unique shot and an aggressive player."

N.B.A. Okays Christoforidis, Bettina Fight

Cleveland, Dec. 31.—The National Boxing Association's No. 1 and No. 2 challengers for the light-heavyweight championship—Melio Bettina and Anton Christoforidis—will fight it out for the title here January 13 in a 15-round match.

Articles for the fight were signed today, and Joseph Triner, N. B. A. president, announced his organization's sanction of the bout to determine a successor to Billy Conn—at least so far as the 34 States represented by the N. B. A. are concerned. Conn recently left the 175-pound division to compete as a heavyweight.

"The articles for the Bettina-Christoforidis match state that the champion agrees to meet Gus Lesnevich wihin 60 days, on terms on an equal basis," Triner said. "That is, there will be no champion's and no challenger's end of the purse in that fight.

Triner declined to discuss the forthcoming bout between Turkey Thompson and Jimmy Webb in New York, advertised by Promoter Mike Jacobs as being for the light-heavyweight championship. Promoter Bob Brickman, who will run the Bettina-Christoforidis fight here, was less reserved.

"I've worked for a month on this, and Jacobs has sought to block me at every turn," Brickman said. "The fact that the N. B. A. and the Cleveland boxing commission have acted in the public interest means not only that Jacobs can't have everything his own way but that a real champion will be crowned."

Bettina hails from Beacon, N. Y., and Christoforidis from Greece.

Arizona State Slight Choice In Sun Bowl

Two Teams Taper Off In Fine Shape; Crowd Of 15,000 Expected

By the Associated Press

El Paso, Tex., Dec. 31.—Western Reserve University of Cleveland and Arizona State Teachers of Tempe put the finishing touches on the timing of their offensive plays for tomorrow's sixth annual Sun Bowl football game.

The confident Arizonians, who were held to a scoreless tie by Catholic University in last year's game, were made slight favorites on most boards here tonight. The Ohioans were reported "eager to get going" in the New Year's Day fray.

Generally fair, warm weather was the forecast. Estimates of the attendance ranged up to 15,000, and Sun Bowl officials said a sell-out was indicated.

Coach Dixie Howell gave further basis for predictions of a wide open contest when he sent his Tempe eleven into intensive practice on protection of the Arizona passers.

Coach Bill Edwards said Joe Hernandez, Bill Davis and Wayne Pitts, of Tempe, were the men for Reserve to watch, but added that his own Dick Booth, 6-foot, 2-inch, 185-pound triple threater, would "show Tempe some fireworks, too."

Howell said his team was at its peak and predicted the first Sun Bowl victory for a host border conference team, "if we can block and tackle like we did" in tying Gonzaga University 7-7 a few weeks ago.

Tempe will be minus the services of T. K. Wootan, right tackle, and Bernard Vitek, a third-string back. End Bob Lackey was believed recovered from an attack of influenza, but Jep Shamblee was expected to start in his place.

Howell indicated that Hernandez and Hascall Henshaw, another fast Tempe back, might be kept on the bench at the game's start, ready to swing into action at the first sign of a scoring opportunity.

Western Reserve's line will outweigh Tempe State 10 pounds a man, the Easterners averaging 193 pounds to Tempe's 183. In the backfield, Western Reserve averages 183, with the heaviest Tempe combination 178.

Eagles Ready for 3 Ice Games in Four Days

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Dec. 31.—Determined to shake off a slump that has resulted in two victories as against as many losses and ties in their last six matches, the Eastern League-leading Washington Eagles tonight were awaiting their New Year hockey match with the New York Rovers in Madison Square Garden tomorrow afternoon.

On Friday night the Eagles are to return to Riverside Stadium, of Washington, for an 8:30 o'clock match with the Jersey Skeeters, of River Vale, N. J., and they are to shift to Atlantic City Saturday night to play the Sea Gulls.

Coach Redvers Mackenzie, prior to his departure en route here this afternoon, predicted that the Eagles would score over both the Rovers and Skeeters and would start a new winning streak in so doing.

"We looked better in our overtime fall before Baltimore last Sunday night than in any of our preceding five matches," Mackenzie declared, "and I'm convinced we're ready to play good hockey again. Our players have thrown off most of their injuries and we've rested sufficiently to get back on our feet."

In their last six matches the Eagles have scored slender one goal victories over the Rovers and Skeeters; have been tied by the Skeeters and Atlantic City, and have lost to Boston and Baltimore. Three of these games have lapsed into overtime.

The fiercest match of the season is forecast by Mackenzie for Riverside Friday night when the Eagles and Skeeters wage war.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Pasadena, Dec. 31.—One year ago today Clark Shaughnessy could not get tickets for himself and his wife to see the Rose Bowl game. The scalpers had them, the old grads had them, in fact the local furniture stores were offering a pair for every purchase of a birdseye maple chiffonier. But there were no tickets for Shaughnessy. He moseyed around the national coaches' convention looking for a pair. His peers and many inferiors among the coaches were sympathetic, of course, but they couldn't waste much time with him. He didn't have a job. The Hon. Robert Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, had dissolved football at the school and, thus, Shaughnessy's job. But finally, on the night before the game, somebody took pity on the guy and slipped him a couple. He took his wife to the game, and saw it from behind the goalposts and took the usual kicking around from the mob, ushers, traffic cops, etc.

CONSIDINE

Tomorrow, he will sit on the 50-yard line, in a chair, a little out in front of the Stanford bench.

They call him the wonder-man of football coaching now, and by all odds he is the "coach of the year." A forlorn figure a year ago, tomorrow he will be hailed by close to 100,000 as he leads his Stanford team into the selfsame bowl to play Nebraska.

If there was any rival in football for Shaughnessy's lowly estate a year ago, it was Stanford's football team. It had not won a game on the Coast and had averted a complete blank for the season by winning over Dartmouth in the final game of the year. Its coach, tiny Thornhill, got the bounce. So, in time, Shaughnessy was made coach of Stanford, and the country chuckled over the mating between one who, while at Chicago, had been the most futile of all coaches, and the team that had pressed Chicago for futility team honors.

The issue from this wedding of zeroes is too well known to review here at any great length. With Thornhill's old squad, virtually intact, Stanford embarked on the 1940 season with a game against San Francisco University. The latter was a 2-1 favorite. And it was hailed as something of a freak performance when Shaughnessy's team, using the old but ever brilliant "T" formation, won by a 27-0 score. The club, of course, went through the entire season without a loss, and it was apparent by midseason that the coach who last year had trouble flushing a ducat, would come in this year behind a trumpet flare.

He was buried so long with mediocre talent that football people are inclined to forget that Shaugrnessy has been a figure in football for nearly a quarter of a century. He came within a hair's breadth of getting the Notre Dame job, when Rockne did. His vast command of the mystery and magic of the "T" formation was recognized within coaching circles all during the years when this ancient system was eclipsed by the Rockne and Warner styles of play.

But Shaughnessy stuck by his system, and is responsible for his friend, George Halas, sticking by it. Together they worked this old but not-too-well exploited lode and developed a "T" attack which, in the hands of competents like the Chicago Bears, has close to 100 bewildering varieties of aggression.

Shaughnessy believes that Stanford players took to it because they are a cut above the average college player, mentally. The system calls for more guile than brute strength, more timing than tenacity. Shaughnessy's Indians will butt you out of the way just enough—never annihilate you. As it turned out they were exactly suited for that type of play. Thornhills' backfield was Albert, Standlee, Gallarneau and Kmetovic. It couldn't go to town with a street car pass. Shaughnessy's backfield, Albert, Standlee, Gallarneau and Kmetovic, is the scourge of the West. It can run, pass, kick and mystify.

But this is no dilletante team. It can fight, too. Washington led it 10-10 at the half, and with Standlee out of the line-up with a creaky leg. But Stanford won, 20-10. U. S. C. had it hog-tied, 7-7, with a few minutes left of the game. But Stanford won, 21-7. It has a tremendous explosive power, this team has, and out this way nobody can see how Nebraska will do anything but serve as a kind of footstool while Shaughnessy and Stanford write the final chapter of an unparalleled rags-to-riches story.

Smoke Bowl Gets Interest At Richmond

All-Star Clash Today Will Benefit Fireman's Fund

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Dec. 31.—Football fever, which has been dormant here since the William and Mary-Richmont State championship game on Thanksgiving Day, flared up again today at the prospect of the New Year's Day Smoke Bowl all-star clash in the City Stadium.

The firemen's benefit game will bring together some of the gridiron's brightest lights on picked teams coached by Riley Smith, of the Washington and Lee staff and George Stirnweiss, former North Carolina quarterbacking great.

Smith's team has been working out here while the other squad, representing Norfolk, has been drilling there.

Ends—John Jett, of Wake Forest, and Hal Bradley, of Elon and the Richmond Arrows of the Dixie Pro League.

Tackles—Frank Albert, of Notre Dame, and Frank Cairo, of Catholic U.

Center—Ed Merrick, former All-Southern Conference center of Richmond.

Backs—Jim Gillette, of Virginia and the Cleveland Rams; Riley Smith, Marshall Goldberg, of Pittsburgh and the Chicago Cardinals, and Rhoten Shetley, of Furman and the Brooklyn Dodgers. Backfield reserves will include Jimmy Ringgold, of Wake Forest, blocker, and Mel Henry, of Virginia Tech.

The Norfolk team will include Dinky Darnell and Bolo Perdue, of Duke, and Ray Hanken, of George Washington and the New York Giants, at ends; Ed Konesteky, of Pitt, and Buck Miles, of Virginia Tech, at tackles; Woody Gray, of V. M. I., and Zuzu Stewart, of George Washington, at guards; Jim Lawless, of Virginia, at center, and Banks McFadden, the Clemson All-American; Jack Hinkle, of Syracuse; Lou Zontini, of Notre Dame, and Wes McAfee, of Duke, in the backfield.

Host Club on Short End of Odds for Pineapple Bowl

Bob Feller No. 1

St. Louis, Dec. 31 (AP).—Cleveland Pitcher Bob Feller, who opened the season with a no-hit game against the White Sox and ended up with 27 victories, today was named baseball's No. 1 player in 1940 by the Sporting News.

The national baseball weekly newspaper, which honors the top-flight stars each year, selected William B. McKechnie, of the Cincinnati Reds, as the leading manager in the major leagues for the second time.

40,000 to See G. U., Maroons Play in Miami

Orange Bowl Classic Finds Hoyas in Role Of 6-to-5 Underdog

pected to team with Koshlap in filling the beautiful Orange Bowl Stadium with aerial bombs.

Another surprise which Coach Jack Hagerty can be expected to pop on Allyn McKeen's Maroons is slim-shanked Jack Doolan, the speedy sophomore halfback, who couldn't have received less publicity than has attended him here. Apparently none of the local observers has realized that Doolan not only was Georgetown's leading scorer of 1940, but that he averaged no less than 7 yards a try in rushing the ball. In every analysis of the Georgetown backfield it has been the regular quartet of McFadden, Koshlap, Ghecas and Castiglia, plus Dornfeld, who have been showered with praise. But those familiar with the Georgetown team of 1940, know full well that Doolan, and not any of the others, is the Hoya back most likely to create panic in the Mississippi State ranks. A sprinter, capable of zipping the century in 9.6 and also a deceptive and smart ball carrier, Doolan, together with State's speed twins, Harvey Johnson and Billy Jefferson, will be marked men.

Long about the third quarter when the neat has begun to take its toll of the players it will be these three backs, who always are kept fresh as a strategic move, who will have it within their power to turn a close game into a rout with several of their piercing long runs.

Other closely watched Georgetown players on the lush green field of the Orange Bowl tomorrow will be Georgetown's second All-America in history, Guard Augie Lio, Al Blozis, the big tackle, and Al Matuza, the rangy center who in the opinion of many is without a peer in the college ranks.

Elrod on the Spot

For Mississippi State the pressure will be on Erwin Elrod, the All-America end, whose feats border on the incredible, and his two companions on the left side of the line, Tackle John Tripson and Capt. and Guard Hunter Corhern. Bulwarks of State's line, described as the fastest charging in all of the South, this trio caused rival teams to operate at a running loss all season when these opponents made the mistake of charging in their direction.

"Is it true what they say about Elrod?" The answer to this paragraph to the question they ask about Dixie is what the Georgetown team is dying to learn. Elrod, the most valuable man in the Southeastern Conference, the defensive demon who was not circled or rushed through for a single first down this season, the blocking marvel who, movies are reported to disclose, did not miss a single blocking assignment all year. These are some of the praises that have showered down upon the head of Mississippi's football pride, and no matter how well Elrod plays he is bound to disappoint.

Likewise with Lio, the Hoyas' colorful Italian whose place-kicking prowess might prove the decisive factor if the game proves close, as most experts believe. Most publicized of all the Georgetown players, Lio probably will live up to his press notices because the powerful youngster is just that kind of a player—good when the chips are down. This he proved on two important occasions. One when he booted a field goal that saved Georgetown's undefeated record and beat Temple, 3 to 2, in the final seconds, and again in the Boston College game, when he scored the first points with a 32-yard placement and in all-around performance was the outstanding lineman of the day.

Out on Limb With G. U.

The stage is set. The crowd will exceed by some 2,000 the largest previous turnout for an Orange Bowl game, which was the 38,000 who saw Georgia Tech beat Missouri last year, and both squads are described as in the best of physical and mental condition. Who will win? Probably the team that gets off the faster and which benefits by the breaks. Subsequently this reporter must pick Georgetown, which is famed for its lightning-like early scores and its penchant for capitalizing the breaks. The score should be something like 20-7.

The weather prediction for tomorrow is fair and warm. Tickets are at a premium, with the best ducats having been sold out days ago. Both teams attended tonight's big parade, but while most of the rest of the world celebrated New Year's Eve all night, they turned in at 10:30.

That's a moral of some kind for you.

D. C. Gas Net Off $19,369 In November

Gain in Operating Revenues Offset by Increased Taxes

Reflecting increased taxes, net income of Washington Gas Light Company decreased to $116,930 in November as compared with $136,299 in the same 1939 month.

Operating revenues for the month totaled $812,482, an increase of $38,119 over November last year.

Operating expenses, including taxes and depreciation, amounted to $631,207 this November compared with $584,675 for November, 1939, an increase of $66,532, of which $34,024 represents increased taxes. Non-operating income increased $7,539 to a total of $21,416, and income deductions show a saving of $1,505 in November this year.

For the first eleven months of this year net income totaled $1,106,377, a gain of $131,529, or 13.5% over the same period last year. Taxes for the current 11 months amounted to $838,062, an increase of $175,52 over last year.

The report also showed gas sales of 1,239,972,999 cubic feet for the month, an increase of 80,346,000 cubic feet or nearly 7 per cent over November, 1939. There were 165,505 meters in service on November 30 this year, an increase of 7,813 over the same date last year. The company expended approximately $122,000 in November and $1,090,400 in the first 11 months of 1940 for extensions to its property.

Firm Name Changed

George M. Ferris & Co., Inc., announced yesterday that as of today the firm name will be changed to Ferris, Exnicios & Co., Inc. This firm has been engaged in the investment banking business since 1932, at which time the firm was organized by George M. Ferris.

At the present time, the officers consist of George M. Ferris, president; Marshall O. Exnicios, executive vice president; Millard F. West, vice president, and William G. Galliher, jr., secretary and treasurer. Associated with them are E. Jerome Howell, Charles D. Carroll and Neill F. Raab.

The firm with offices in the Washington Building, has two seats on the Washington Stock Exchange.

Mr. Ferris has been in the investment business for about 20 years. He is vice president of the Washington Stock Exchange and past president of the Washington Bond Club.

Month's Clearings Set Record

December bank clearings set a new all-time high of $139,843,554, the Washington Clearing House Association reported yesterday. Compared with $115,388,360 in the same month last year, the increase was 17½ per cent.

For the full year, clearings aggregated $1,414,332,884 in comparison with $1,206,088,029 in 1939. The year's total was the highest since 1929, when clearings reached $1,481,390,723.

Chicago Livestock

Chicago, Dec. 31 (AP).—The hog market fell away sharply today after a slow start and prices were generally 15 to 20 cents lower with the top at 7.05. Cattle were weak and 25 cents lower, and sheep steady.

Hog receipts were heavier than expected and a little heavier than a week ago. The market ran into an indifferent demand with the bulk of good light and medium weight butchers selling at 6.85@7.05.

Cattle trade was pretty much at a standstill with many loads of weighty steers offered without a bid. Several choice loads were bid above 14.00 and prime offerings were held well above 15.00, of fat lambs selling at 9.50@9.60.

Steer trade was steady with the bulk (United States Department of Agriculture.)

SALABLE HOGS—Receipts, 24,000; total, 33,000; opened around 10 lower than Monday's average, later trade generally 15 to 20 off; top, 7.10; bulk good and choice, 160-220 lbs., 6.85@7.05; most 240-290 lb. butchers, 6.75@6.90; some 270-310 lb. averages, 6.60@6.80; good packing sows, 400 lbs. down, mostly 5.75@6.00; light lightweights around 6.10; 400-550 lb. kinds, 5.50@5.75.

SALABLE CATTLE—Receipts, 7,000; salable calves, receipts, 1,200; fed steers predominate in run; yearlings comparatively scarce; steer and yearling trade unevenly steady to 25 lower, mostly 15 to 25 down on medium to good weighty steers; choice kinds and good and choice yearlings, steady; prime offerings held above 15.25; several loads choice weighty steers bid well above 14.00; but bulk 11.00@13.00, either without bids or 50 fully 25 down; few early sales at 9.75@12.75, steady to weak; all she stock scarce and steady; heifers in fresh receipts very scarce; choice 990-lb. heifers held from Monday; top for this class, 12.75; most offerings, 8.50@11.00; cutter cows, 5.75 down; beef cows, 6.25@7.25; practical top weighty sausage bulls, 7.75, although 7.85 paid for outstanding offerings; choice vealers firm early at 12.50@13.00; light and medium weight kinds closing 25 lower at 12.00 down; thin fat cattle very scarce.

SALABLE SHEEP—Receipts, 5,000; total, 5,000; late Monday fat lambs around strs and natives, 9.40@9.60; few loads, 25 lower; bulk good and choice fed Westerns, 9.70; sheep steady; double handyweight Western ewes, 5.00; today's trade; fat lambs generally steady; bulk good and choice handyweights, early, 9.50@9.60; few medium to good kinds, 9.00@9.25; choice kinds held upward to 9.75; fat sheep steady; small lots natives and fed Western ewes, 3.50@4.75.

Boston Wool

Boston, Dec. 31 (AP) (U. S. Dept. Agr.)—Scattered sales were closed on domestic wools in the Boston market today. Moderate quantities of graded combing one-quarter blood, bright fleece wools were sold at 44@46 cents, in the grease, but the three-eighths blood grade of similar wools were sold in small quantities at 42@45 cents, in the grease, and the scoured basis prices were being estimated at 1.10 to 1.12. Original bag, fine territory wools were sold in small quantities at 1.03 to 1.05, scoured basis, for good French combing lengths, and at 1.00 to 1.02, scoured basis, for short to average French combing length.

Study Launched On Longer Hours For Big Board

New York, Dec. 31 (AP).—A five-man special committee to study the petition of members for longer trading hours on the New York Stock Exchange was announced today by William McC. Martin, jr., president.

The petition, latest step in a series of moves undertaken the past year to extend trading hours, was presented to the board of governors last week. It was understood that more than 200 of the exchange's 600 member firms signed the plea to extend trading hours to 4 o'clock Monday through Friday from the present 3 o'clock closing hour.

The committee will consider all phases of the subject and report its findings back to the board of governors. It consists of Edgar Scott, of Montgomery, Scott & Co., Philadelphia; Ernest L. Jones, of Pyne, Kendall & Hollister, New York, and Howard B. Dean, Sidney Rheinstein and Sylvester P. Larkin, New York members of the exchange. All are members of the board of governors.

Omaha Cattle Prices Soar to 3-Year Top

Gus Beemer, Stanton, Nebr., feeder, marketed a load of prime Angus and Hereford steers at the top price and John Prinz, West Point, Nebr., feeder, equaled the mark with his Herefords. Previous 1940 top was $14.60.

Fuller Urges 'Patriotic Best' Of Industry

Must Discard Notion Of Normal Output, Says N. A. M. Head

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 31.—Walter D. Fuller, newly elected president of the National Association of Manufacturers, today called upon members of the organization to do their "patriotic best" to speed defense production and asserted management, labor and Government together "can make certain it is not too late to make America strong."

Declaring that industry must reappraise the situation in the light of President Roosevelt's message last Sunday night, Fuller informed the more than 7,000 members of the association:

"The President told us, on the grounds of advice to which only Government can have access, that the urgency is so great that our task 'can only be accomplished if we discard the notion of business as usual.' This job, he said, 'cannot be done merely by superimposing on the existing productive facilities the needed requirements for defense.'

"This is a sharp change in orders, to meet which will require massive changes in many manufacturers' plans. Insofar as the task was defined within defense orders placed and time limits specified by Government, industry has done a herculean job in the six months since it went into defense production. Now manufacturers everywhere should reappraise their situations to speed up defense production as much as possible and at the same time inventory the conditions within and without their individual control under which additional defense production can be placed at the disposal of their Government."

U. S. Gold Imports In Week Slump To Two-Year Low

By the Associated Press

Drastic curtailment of British Empire shipments, the Commerce Department said yesterday, reduced gold imports in the week ended December 25 to $8,125,788—the lowest weekly total since July 8, 1938.

The empire, which had been sending sometimes more than $100,000,000 a week to the United States, last week sent only $3,065,021 from Canada and $4,196,321 from India. The only other shipments were cargoes of a few thousand dollars each from a score of countries scattered from Portugal to the Philippine Islands.

Foreign gold deposited under earmark in Federal Reserve Banks increased during the week by $4,245,956 to a total of $1,804,597,244.

Gold exports amounted to $1,235; silver exports, $3,350.

Pontiac Sales Set Record in 1940

Pontiac, Mich., Dec. 31 (AP).—Pontiac division of General Motors Corporation delivered more than 240,000 new cars to retail buyers in 1940, according to H. J. Klingler, president and general manager.

The best previous year in the company's history from a retailing standpoint was 1928 when 232,635 Pontiac and Oakland cars were delivered.

Klingler said Pontiac employes numbered 10,835 in 1940 compared with 8,696 in 1939 and that pay rolls were $19,741,493 compared to $13,298,984 for 1939.

London Stocks

London, Dec. 31 (AP).—Security prices displayed further quiet strength today, although trading was hampered by interruptions to travelling and telephonic services by Sunday's severe air raids.

British government bonds finished with gains ranging to ½ point, thus closing 1940 trade at around the year's top prices as a result of sustained investment buying. Foreign bonds were neglected.

Oils, where changed, added a few pence. Mexican Eagle, for instance, was up 3 pence at 6 shillings 6 pence.

New York Cotton

New York, Dec. 31 (AP).—Cotton futures rode out of 1940 today on the crest of a buying boomlet that put final quotations at the highs of the season. Closing prices were up 4 to 7 points.

Encouraged by recent firmness, a steady flow of buying came through from trade and mill interests, backed up by commission houses.

Modest inquiry developed in Worth Street for selected cotton prints. Mill asking prices held unchanged.

Sales totaled 4,719 bales; season so far 602,228. Port receipts, 12,882. Port stocks, 3,396,397.

New York Dry Goods

New York, Dec. 31 (AP).—Woolen piece goods jobbers reported increased call for spot overcoatings although this material is scarce. There was a moderate inquiry for cotton goods, with prices firm and unchanged. In the rayon goods section, spring print weaves received the major attention. Business in silk piece goods was at a standstill.

Stocks Continue Rally in 1940 Adieu; Gains Ranging to One Point Predominate

By Frederick Gardner
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Dec. 31.—The stock market bade farewell to 1940 with few regrets today, although it managed to maintain its year-end rally on a selective basis after a forenoon stumble.

While there were scattered weak spots throughout the list at the finish and numerous issues were unable to shake off small minus marks, gains of fractions to a point or so predominated. There were a few wider bulges.

Many traders inclined to cash in on the advance which got under way last Friday in view of the fact financial exchanges will recess tomorrow for the New Year's celebration. Others were hesitant because of growing apprehension over the possible entry of this country into the European war.

At the same time business news remained of a stimulating nature, with the huge defense spending program drawing attention to stocks of companies which stand to benefit materially. In addition, belated adjustments of accounts for tax purposes were hardly oppressing and reinvestment demand proved a strong bolstering influence.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was up 0.1 of a point at 43.9, making it four successive advances for this composite. The barometer ended 1939 at 51.2 and the year's net loss was 7.3 points. The 1940 top of 52.2 was established January 3 and the low of 37 was reached June 10.

The day's turnover of 1,073,070 shares compared with 1,179,277 Monday. For the full year volume of 207,636,059 shares was the lowest since 1921 and was about 56,000,000 under 1939.

Among today's stocks Universal Pictures preferred, a 10-share trading unit, jumped 11 poinst to 128 and Savage Arms held a gain of 1⅜ at 42, both new tops for the year.

Others emerging on the upside included Bethlehem Steel, Montgomery Ward, Woolworth, Eastman Kodak, General Electric, American Can, Loew's, U. S. Gypsum, American Telephone, Union Pacific, Standard Oil of N. J., Du Pont and Johns-Manville.

On the losing side were Chrysler, General Motors, U. S. Steel, American Smelting, Douglas Aircraft, Allied Chemical, Westinghouse, Great Northern, Sears Roebuck and Goodyear.

Bell Aircraft stepped up in the Curb, along with Creole Petroleum, Lake Shore, Pantepec Oil, Pennroad and Todd Shipyards. Under water were N. J. Zinc, American Gas and Gulf Oil. Transactions here approximated 271,000 shares against 332,000 yesterday.

Railroad issues attained the highest average price of 1940 in the closing session of the bond market today.

Gains in the group ranged from small fractions to more than a point and embraced a large number of low-priced issues expected to benefit considerably from the increased flow of freight and passenger traffic forecast for 1941. Some circles estimated December operating income would top that for any December since 1930.

Prominent in the final push were Illinois Central refunding 4s at 40, New England Railroad 4s at 45, Alleghany convertible 5s at 97½, St. Paul 5s at 5, Rock Island general 4s at 14½ and Southern Pacific 4½s at 40½.

Sales on the New York Stock Exchange in 1940 totaled 207,636,059 shares, the smallest since 1921 when turnover aggrgated 172,778,535 shares. Sales in 1939 amounted to 263,015,699 shares.

Sales of bonds on the exchange dropped to $1,671,598,775, par value from $2,048,237,875 in 1939 and were the lowest since $1,034,568,500 changed hands in 1917.

December stock sales of 19,400,428 shares compared with 20,887,311 in November and 17,768,713 in December, 1939.

Bond turnover of $211,512,125, par value, was the largest for any month since $480,789,000 in September, 1939, and compared with $159,006,000 in November, 1939, and $176,100,090 in December, a year ago.

The stock market had a bearish tinge through the greater part of 1940 as indicated by a comparison of the Associated Press averages at today's close and a year ago.

For the 60 stock average the year's decline amounted to $7.30 a share. The 1940 high, $52.20, was recorded January 3. And the low, $37, on June 10. The final average was $43.90. Range of the individual groups follows: 30 industrials $74.20 $52.30 $62.60, down $10.40; 15 railroads, $20.50 $13 $16.10, down $3.70; 15 utilities 40.60 $30.90 $34.90, down $4.80.

Postal Telegraph Bows; Will Void Exclusive Pacts

New York, Dec. 31 (AP).—A consent decree terminating a civil action by the Government against the Postal Telegraph Co., alleging conspiracy to violate the Sherman antitrust law, was signed today by Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard.

Under the decree, the Postal Co. agrees to void existing contracts for exclusive business privileges and to refrain from making such contracts in the future.

The Department of Justice began the action December 1, 1937.

The decree, which stipulated that Postal Telegraph did not acknowledge any violation of law, becomes operative only when similar action against the Western Union Telegraph Co. is settled.

The two companies were accused of making exclusive contracts with railroads, hotels and others.

Crude Oil Output Declines in Week

Tulsa, Dec. 31 (AP).—Daily crude oil production in the United States declined 233,425 barrels to 3,369,740 for the week ended December 28, the Oil and Gas Journal said today.

Grains Close Year With Rise In Progress

Fractional Advances In Wheat Attributed To Milling Demand

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Dec. 31.—Wheat futures contracts bade farewell to 1930 with an ascending trend today, closing the short, final session of the year with advances extending to ⅞ cent a bushel for the deferred contracts.

Every future delivery of all commodities except lard ended trading at an advance over the previous day's final prices and virtually all were at or near the best levels of the day. Strength in wheat was attributed to some small milling demand, absence of selling pressure and support from commission houses. The usual pre-holiday dullness, however, hung over the pits during the three hours of trading.

At the final gong, wheat prices were ⅛ to ⅞ cents above Monday's closing quotations; May, 87⅛@87; July, 82⅛@82; September, 82⅛@82¾. Corn advanced ¼ to ½; May, 63⅜@63¾; July, 62⅞@63. Oats were ¼ to ½ up, soy beans ⅝ to 1 cent higher, Rye ¼ to ⅜ up and lard 2 cents higher to 18 cents off.

Firmness of the Minneapolis, Winnipeg and Buenos Aires markets also helped influence the market here. Reports from the Argentine said that rains had reduced the quantity and quality of both wheat and linseed there. There were also reports from Kansas City of the most serious fall infestation of rust ever encountered.

Ted Husing is to bring you the play-by-play description of the football battle between Washington's Georgetown and Mississippi State, the game popularly known as that of the Orange Bowl of Miami, in a broadcast which you'll hear exclusively over WJSV and the Columbia network today. It starts at 2 p. m.

Mississippi State is the unbeaten cochampion of the Southeastern Conference. In ten games it has amassed 230 points to foes' 51.

Georgetown, as probably all of you know, in nine games has scored 273 points to its opponents' 40, losing only one game, that to unbeaten Boston College, by a 19-to-18 score. It will be Georgetown's first visit to the Orange Bowl.

When the Third Division of the First Battalion of Washington's Organized Naval Reserve leave for active duty in the Canal Zone this evening, Lieut. Comdr. Arthur Godfrey, U. S. N. R., who's also something of a commanding figure around WJSV as you know, is to be present to describe the ceremonies.

The broadcast will come from the Norfolk & Washington Line docks at Maine Avenue, formerly known as Water Street Southwest, between 6:15 and 6:30 and Lieut. Comdr. Godfrey says he'll be very pleased to see as many Washingtonians present as can get there. (P. S.: He'll be in his full uniform as lieutenant commander!)

The Third Division comprises about 100 men who have been ordered to active duty aboard the destroyer, J. Fred Talbot, in the Canal Zone.

Contract Bridge

Today we have a bidding question put to us. It is from Mrs. L. J. F., who asks about interference bidding against an opening two-suit forcing bid.

She writes "South opens with a forcing two-diamond bid. West, holding four diamonds, including the king, four spades with the ace, queen, ten; four of clubs with the queen, and the ace of hearts singleton (♠AQ102, ♡A, ◇K874, ♣Q653), doubles the bid. North passes. East says two no trump, having a bust hand with the highest card the queen of diamonds. South doubles, West and North pass. East and West are vulnerable and East plays the hand, going down three tricks.

"I don't remember what cards the opponents held, except that the opening bidders had the strong hand and little or no strength lay in his partner's hand. Where were the mistakes in the bidding?"

West was very foolish to double the two-suit forcing bid. His hand could be used very effectively in defense of any game contract North and South agreed upon, and which they were committed to by virtue of the opening bid. It was no time for West to take aggressive action.

East, holding a nearly blank hand, in response to the double should reply with his best four-card suit rather than a dangerous no-trump bid. However, the result must be charged to the original double rather than to the partner's reply.
